That is as far as it applies to Ruth Elder, who won fame when she almost flew the Atlantic five years ago with George Haldeman. Ruth's most recent husband, Walter Camp, sen of the late football authority, is the third man with whom she embarked on the marital voyage. He will also be third who has been parted from the glamorous flyer via the divorce court. Ruth's first venture into matrimony was with C. E. Moody, a school teacher of Clayton, Ga., whom she married when she was too young to really know her own mind. That ended in the divorce court. Her next was Lyle Womack, an elec-tric sign salesman of Balbea Heights, Panama, whom she wed in 1925 at Birmingham, Ala. That idyll ended when Womack charged Ruth with desortion and cruelty after her attempted trans-Atlantic flight After being divoreed from Womack, Ruth married Camp, confident that at last she had found a man who understood her. But it now transpires that she was mistaken, for their married life has been a continual clash Romance, like fame, is fleeting. That is as far as it applies to Ruth Elder.
