

LINDSAY SHORN OF HIS POWER

Kerr Made Chief Official Of Higher Education; Move Significant

The aggregate payment for the part-time workers was $273.90. Lindsay Ranks Next To Kerr in Stipend
Dr. Lindsay's salary continues at $425 a month or $7500 a year, placing him next to Chancellor Kerr as the highest paid state official in Oregon.
Effective July 1, 1932, all state employees, save those drawing less than $100 a month, took salary cuts ranging from three to 15 per cent. Supreme court justices and the governor, whose salaries are fixed by law at $7500 annually, took reductions of $1125 a year, making their annual pay now $6375.
While Dr. Kerr is known as a master of diplomacy and able usually to make changes without turmoil, it is also evident that the situation at Salem has not met with his favor and that his recommended economies to the board Monday include a major reorganization, reduction and shift of the board of higher education office.

Pausing in Rochester and Buffalo to deliver two strokes for the campaign of his old friend, Lieut. Gov. Herbert H. SCHOOLS EXEMPT TO ZONING RULES

Catholics win Their Point On Case Over Location Of new Structure

The state supreme court in an opinion handed down Tuesday held unconstitutional a zoning ordinance approved by the voters of Portland on November 4, 1924, so far as it applies to educational institutions.
The litigation originated in Portland more than two years ago when the Roman Catholic church, through Archbishop Edward D. Howard, filed application with the city council for a permit authorizing the construction of a school building in Laurelhurst addition, to house approximately 120 children.
Members of the council later viewed the property and recommended that the permit be granted. Subsequently, a number of persons owning property in the Laurelhurst district filed remonstrances, and on August 15, 1930, the council rescinded its previous action and voted against granting the application.
The remonstrators alleged that the property to be occupied by the proposed school was located in a restricted district, and that the erection of the building would depreciate materially the value of other property in the Laurelhurst section.
The Catholic church then filed suit in the Multnomah county circuit court demanding that the permit to erect the school building be granted. Judge Norton, after hearing the arguments, granted a mandatory injunction, from which the defendants appealed to the supreme court.
"The right of own property is an inherent right, and the supreme court opinion read, 'The right of ownership is subject to the superior rights of the public to appropriate such property for certain public uses on payment of just compensation. The right to own real property is the right to use that property in any manner that the owner may desire so long as such use will not impair the public health, peace, safety or general welfare.'"
In another opinion the supreme court upheld the writ of the state treasurer, inasmuch as in an original mandamus proceeding brought by Morris, Mather & company, to collect approximately $12,585 due as interest on bonds issued by the port of Astoria.
