which have been built through generations of testing and struggle, and of the principles upon which we have built the nation.

Calling upon his audience to "look into the faces of leaders who are campaigning for the democratic ticket," the president listed Senator Norris of Nebraska, La Follette of Wisconsin, Cutting of New Mexico, all progressive republicans; Senator Long of Louisiana and Wheeler of Montana, democrats, and William Randolph Hearst, publisher.

Boos came from the audience as the president named these men, whose seal, he said, "indicates that they will have sure confidence that they will have a voice in the administration of our government."

Mr. Hoover said he could "respect the sincerity of these men in their desire to change our form of government and our social-economic system, though I shall do my best tonight to prove they are wrong."

duced from $2400 annually to $2000.

A letter was read by Clifford Moynihan from a labor organization suggesting that reductions in fire department pay might bring reduced morale. The letter brought a retort from W. H. Dancy.

"Don't believe salary cuts will hurt our fire or police department service a bit," Dancy said. "There are hundreds of men in this city, some of them taxpayers, who would like to have the steady paid jobs of these men. Ordinarily I do not believe in cutting salaries but these are extraordinary times and extraordinary measures must be adopted."

Fred Pavis suggested the need of a city program in meeting bond debts to mature within the next few years and the budget group agreed the 1933 council should take up such planning.

Paulus, chairman of the citizens' ways and means committee, explained that a $16,103.98 item recommended by him as emergency fund included $14,693 for payment of delinquent bond interest and principal. Alderman Dancy objected to placing the sum in that fund, asserting that the council would be continually dipping out of it. Alderman David O'Hara suggested that $9000 be out from the emergency fund to bring the levy reduction to a full mill.

Paulus' committee also recommended that the building inspector's salary be set at a flat $2100 and the fees according to his office be placed in the general fund. Heretofore, the inspector has been guaranteed $2400 and allowed up to $3000 if sufficient fees were taken in.

The city engineer's office will be reduced to one instead of two and one-half assistants as soon as slackening of street work permits, committees are formed. One of the assistants now serves half time as assistant to the building inspector.

Expenses on the municipal airport next year will be reduced to a $250 insurance item through offer of Lee U. Eversly to pay the former $200 annual sum for upkeep.

it into conformity with the reduction.

The uncertainties in the tuition case have thrown considerable extra burden on the tax collecting department this year, as at first no tuition tax was collected from those outside high school districts, pending outcome of the suit. When this suit was finally settled, many paid the tuition fund, but the total as levied. Now rebates will likely be made on this, and the rolls corrected in this manner, as well as where the tax has not yet been paid.

The tuition fund is a separate item on the assessment blank, which will to some extent facilitate handling the changes.

Yamhill county has already indicated what percentage should be deducted from the tuition fund by reason of the court decision, this total comparing with the Marion county one. Sheriff Bower said yesterday:

The two items which the supreme court held unconstitutional in the tuition matter, and on which refund is based, are interest on fair value of the investment in high school buildings; and interest on furniture, apparatus and equipment. Interest on such investment as an operating charge is not assessable to non-high school districts, the court decided.

CHAMBER OPPOSES COLLEGES' MERGER

Directors Take Stand, Show Rumors Salem in Favor Poorly Founded

Insinuations being bounced over the state that Salem business leaders were in favor of the school merger because it would bring the law school here, were definitely spiked yesterday when nine of the 11 directors of the Salem chamber of commerce voted unanimous opposition to the consolidation bill.

The vote was taken at a directors' meeting following the regular luncheon, at which Judge Lawrence T. Harris of Eugene spoke in opposition to the merger. The affirmative angle was presented two weeks ago.

Admitting a personal interest in the financial or census destruction passage of the bill would make to the city of Eugene, Judge Harris told of a greater financial loss which would result to the people of Oregon through shrinkage of the $750,000 investments of the industrial accident commission in bonds sold by Eugene, La Grande, Ashland and Monmouth in construction university and normal school buildings. Should the bill pass, these bonds would be worth no more than 10 cents on the dollar, Judge Harris said, thus helping to undermine the protection built up for the working man and employer.

Declaring that the Zorn-Macpherson bill would be defeated overwhelmingly, Judge Harris outlined other reasons for the defeat, as follows:

The consolidationists' plan continues six institutions of higher education, the same number as at present: the merged unit at Corvallis, junior colleges at La Grande and Ashland, law school at Salem, teacher college at Eugene and medical school at Portland.

"Physical property at the University of Oregon in Eugene now represents investment of $4,510,000 by the state, and if this bill passes and puts a teacher college at Eugene, not more than 20 per cent of the plant can be used, representing a total waste of $0 per cent."

Bonds outstanding against fraternity and sorority homes in Eugene total more than $600,000, which bonds would not be worth a cent on the dollar if the university is moved. In addition property values in Eugene would shrink from 19,000 to 10,000 or 11,000, the judge said.

Contract reasons will not allow people of Oregon to vote easily for the consolidation, Judge Harris declared, pointing out that by legislative act the college was permanently located at Corvallis and by further legislative act, the state university located at Eugene. The pioneers who made these written promises made them in solemn faith and today's children and grandchildren of pioneers are going to keep that faith.

Adding to talk that the merger would be against the interests of Robert John Stewart, his small son who was electrocuted last summer while playing in the park at Quincy, but was against the Portland General Electric company.

Settlement papers filed with the county clerk yesterday showed that the child, while playing in a tree at the park, swung against one of the electric company's high voltage wires. Settlement also allows attorney's fees for plaintiff.

Stewart is pastor of the Free Methodist church here.

Slick Pavement Noted, Highway Beyond Brooks

Slick paving is reported on the stretch of road now undergoing improvement, between Brooks and Aurora. The shoulders of the road are being widened, and the work often throws considerable soft mud on the paving, making it necessary for motorists to proceed cautiously, especially in rainy weather like yesterday.

The soft shoulders make it important not to get off the hard surface, if one wants to avoid getting stuck in the mud.

CHICAGO, Oct. 31—(AP)—Chanting "We want bread," Chicago's unemployed surged through the loop today in a giant, orderly parade and joined in a mass demonstration at downtown Grant park to protest diminished relief allowances which had been cut in half during October for lack of funds. Full allowances are provided for November.

Traffic was snarled and thousands lined the sidewalks as marchers, flanked by 1,000 policemen, snaked over the streets in a drizzle of rain.

Defying police orders against red flags and "inflammatory" banners, marchers held aloft crimson banners, the hammer and sickle of communism, placards protesting against authorities and signs demanding additional relief.
