HEARING ON ARIEL DEVELOPMENT SET

Federal Power Commission To Probe in Connection With Northwestern

Hearing on the Ariel development project of the Inland Power & Light company has been set for November 18 at Portland, according to information received Tuesday by Charles M. Thomas, public utility commissioner. The hearing will be conducted by the federal power commission.

Thomas said the hearing was requested in connection with a complete investigation of the Northwestern Electric company and its affiliated organizations. The Ariel dam, which is located near Vancouver, Wash., is valued at approximately $8,000,000, and furnishes considerable power to the Northwestern Electric company. Information desired by the federal power commission is the date on which operations were started and the exact cost of the project. The evidence will be taken by Ralph E. Williamson, commissioner. Thomas said two state engineers had been conducting an investigation of the project for some time.

The Inland Power & Light company, owner of the Ariel dam property, is a subsidiary of the Portland Power & Light company, Thomas declared. The latter company, with the Portland Gas & Coke company and the Northwestern Electric are owned by the American Power & Light company, a subsidiary of the Electric Bond & Share company. The Electric Bond & Share company holds service contracts with all of these local companies.

The Portland Power & Light company, according to Thomas, operates the Ariel dam and had contracted with the Northwestern company for the sale of not less than 15,000 kilowatt hours. This contract is now before the Oregon utilities commission to determine whether the charges are reasonable.

Thomas said the Ariel dam was constructed by the Phoenix construction company, also a subsidiary of the Electric Bond & Share company. The construction costs are under investigation both by the federal power commission and the Oregon utilities commission, Thomas said.

BLOODSHED MARKS VOTE IN KENTUCKY

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Nov. 8. (AP)—One man was killed and five wounded in three clashes today as Kentucky voters thronged to the polls in such numbers as to promise to beat the 1928 record of 940,514 ballots in a presidential year.

At Tyrone, in the Bluegrass, Charles Redmond, 40, was shot to death and Sheriff O. Y. Walker of Anderson county, who lodged Tommy Shryock, 35, in jail, said he was told the men were enemies of long standing and Redmond had been drinking and followed Shryock from the polls to a store where the shooting occurred.

In the southeastern mountains four were wounded in a disturbance at Four Mile, in Bell county, and at Island Creek, in Pike county. James T. Fields, 26, was shot twice in the body and once in the head in an argument said to have started over the election. Roosevelt Elswick, arrested for the shooting, was quoted by the sheriff as saying he fired when Fields said another man "jumped on him." A physician said Fields had a slight chance to recover.

KING AND THE BEGGARMAN

Though this picture was made in 1925, the present crisis in London makes it particularly timely. A ragged beggarman is shown running beside the carriage of King George (left) soliciting alms. Today the royal palace in London is threatened by an army of hunger-marchers demanding relief from the government. An attempt to crash the palace gates recently resulted in scores of jobs being injured by the cordons of police that repulsed the attack.

WELL, how do you feel this morning? Outside of being sleepy, the newshounds feel as though they had a great night. There is nothing more interesting than to work around a paper election night. Even former newspapermen manage to get some job for that night. Jerrold Owen was seen at the Oregonian working with John Kelly all night as of old.

It was also a great day for state officials. Not being required to work on the official holiday, many were seen in Salem and in Portland enjoying the arguments and listening to early returns. Returns started coming in early in the morning and shortly after noon the wires carried little else but election returns.

New Ashford, Mass., the small town which prides itself on being the first to send in complete returns, gave Hoover 24 and Roosevelt 8 votes. In the early returns, with several exceptions, this was about the only time the president took the lead. But the case is all settled now.

Early in the day two women, in the east, had dropped dead of heart disease, one at the polls and the other just after having voted. And then they say some people don't take elections and their right to vote seriously. Probably before the day and night had passed some others will be known to have taken this event in a serious manner.

My, what strange garb does come out of closets when it rains—on election day. Pre-war apparel was in evidence as folks went a-polling.

We are wondering how, if at all, the people in remote sections got to the polls without new license plates for the Lizzies. Perhaps they went right ahead and drove their cars without the declaration of a 24-hour license moratorium. At least we saw no reports of any arrests and opine that police officers would be so concerned over other matters that they might forget to notice whether or not the license plates were new or old.

We didn't have time to listen to the radio, but Al Lindbeck of the

Cyclist Dies In Collision On Highway

Death chalked up score No. 22 on his 1932 chart of automobile crash victims in Marion county at about 7 o'clock yesterday morning. Ollie Cochran, 35, of Albany, riding a motorcycle, crashed head-on into a bakery truck driven by William Jefferson of Albany about 10 miles south of here on the Pacific highway. Cochran died instantly.

Jefferson told state police that he was driving at from 35 to 40 miles an hour near the Leeway service station, when Cochran appeared, rounding a turn. Seeing Cochran was unable to make the curve, Jefferson attempted to swerve out of the motorcycle's path, but could not avoid the collision, he said.

Both of Cochran's legs were shattered and his body badly mangled. The motorcycle was a total wreck and the radiator on the truck crushed in.

Cochran is survived by his widow. He was an automobile mechanic in the employ of the Union oil company. He was known in Salem.

His death makes the 22nd from automobile crashes to occur in the county this year.
