

MARION SOLONS HIGHLY ACTIVE

Brown Presides in Senate At Times; Spaulding's Bills in Limelight

Representative Romeo Gouley has introduced only three bills thus far and these at the instigation of committees but he is taking an active part in committee work. Two of the bills deal with the regulation of the use of aeroplanes. One measure would demand inspection of manufacturers and distributors of soda-water. Gouley is a member of the important house committee on motor vehicles. He is also on the game laws committee and has been active in considering legislation given to proposed changes in the game code. These call for giving the state game commission more latitude in opening and closing the season on game animals and in determining the bag limits.

SESSION DRIFTS TO UNCERTAIN HARBOR

Since its first carefully worded and non-toothsome resolution for a sales tax, the Meier administration has exercised little legislative guidance or control. A group of messages has come in, it is true, but they have dealt with questions in the main political and of no immediate moment such as Columbia river and telephone investigation, old tricks in the bag of state politics. Utilities Control Bill Vital Issue

Most important and imminent of the administration measures is the one to give more power to the state utilities commission and to let his office have more taxation control in collecting fees. This bill was warmly supported by Commissioner Thomas in a series of hearings during the past week; the utility interests are opposing it but the measure has a favorable chance to pass.

Senator W. E. Burke's series of salary cutting bills smolder in committee where he claims they have been "railroaded." It is likely that the general and means committee's general action on salaries will take precedence over them. Higher education seems to have the edge in its attempt to maintain its continuing appropriations. Instead the millage within the six per cent limitation may be cut 25 per cent or an estimated reduction of $700,000 in higher education's receipts for 1933-34.

The session is yet in flux. The bulk of legislators are working as hard as they know how on the bills before them in committee and showing up for all rollcalls when their respective houses are in session. The work which attracts the eye is yet ahead and no legislative leader can predict with any certainty the final outcome of this rather unorganized, slow-moving session where the gloom of general business and the state's tangled finances seem to have taken the edge from many a senator and representative and made this matter of making laws a sombre business.

SALARY REDUCTIONS FOR JUDGES RAPPED

meat would lay the courts open to political pressure both in forcing decisions and in venting spite on judges for giving adverse decisions. Points to "Moral Grounds" as Remedy

The legal men maintained that in preventing oppressive mortgage foreclosures in cases where the defendants were attempting to act in good faith, the remedy lay in observing the moral grounds of individual cases. It was pointed out that foreclosures are handled through courts of equity, which by their nature are qualified to consider the moral grounds of the cases and can assist a deserving mortgagor through delays in proceedings. A general moratorium would be taken unfair advantage of, it was predicted.

LUPER CASE WOULD HAVE COST FORTUNE

The $15,000 which has been associated with possible cost of trying Rhea Luper on indictment which was dismissed in circuit court here on motion of the district attorney, is a mere trifle compared to what trial of Luper would actually have cost the county. William H. Trindle, district attorney, said yesterday.

"That trial would have cost Marion county at least $100,000," Trindle stated, adding that when he noted a "tremendous cost" in his motion to dismiss, he meant just that.

"This may seem unbelievable, but when you look at just a few of the figures you realize the great burden that trial would have put upon the taxpayers here," Trindle said.

"For instance, to prove one item alone, over 4,500 witnesses would have to be called. All these live in eastern Oregon, and a conservative estimate of traveling fees per witness would be $10, which means 45,000 to prove just that one item of the indictment."

This sum does not include the $3 per day witness fee, in addition to mileage. And for mileage the $10 average is way low. It would actually cost $13.80 in mileage to bring a witness from Hood River, the closest point where any of the 4,500 persons live.

On this one phase of the trial alone, 4,516 witnesses would have to be called because the alleged $4,518 sum which interest was diverted to his own use by Luper was made up of deposits of 4,516 persons.

Gearin, his attorney has indicated, will make restitution for the total sum and will devote the next several years, or as long as it takes, to this end.
