erward famous for classification of Oregon grasses, nearly 200 in field and turn under the dense growth of wild roses that was overrunning his ranch. He wanted me to drive the exen while he held the plow. (Probably John

Whiteaker first governor of Oregon elected under the state form of government.) Wild with joy, I wrought late and long. I was barefooted and my tattered trousers reached not far below the

to smart and my feet to hurt me

so much that I begged not to stay

tion and ran home holding tight

she sat at her little wheel spinning. (Evidently spinning flax.)

Mother kissed me and cried and we cried and cried together, with

Statesman Readers

Please allow me a little space

He says "Why should we weep

He says this measure is a step backwards. This is where he is wrong. It is time to go forward and help to create employment for thousands of people that could get work in the hop yards

Mr. Woodward may well weep

but how many people can the dairyman employ in comparison

I also noticed the last two seasons when people come to Salem

and when down and out they did not send them to the dairymen.

They were sent to the hop yards.

An act of law exempting homes

Permit no more bonds for Abolish all offices and commis-

Enact a sales tax with other

Appropriate one million dollars

The Willamette valley fully developed would support 5,000,000 people or more. Let them have an opportunity to be self-supporting

We still hear rumors from the legislative halls at Salem that s

general sales tax is being dished up for general consumption. We trust that this is only rumor, because it would be a crime against society to impose a sales tax upon the necessities of life at this particular time. To do so would be an unpardonable sin against hu-

Ten years ago in Wisconsin we saw two blind men walking down

the street arm in arm. One blind man was patting the side walk with his cane, and guiding the down the throats of the blind, the poor and the unemployed of our

Our good friend, Charles V.

do we go to those who have for taxes, the men and women who

The argument that the income and inheritance taxes will not pro-

W. L. JONES.

and self respecting citisens.

Editor Statesman:

for settlement of the unemployed proper sources of revenue for an sions not absolutely necessary.

sconomical administration.

on the soil.

manity.

state?

and farms from taxation. Make no appropriations for education, except for the common schools.

roads, or anything else.

Program for legislature:

Resp., J. A. BROWN.

for the hop growers to the discrimination of the dairyman.

in your paper in regard to Senator Woodward's remarks on the

Dear Editor:

Beckman beer bill.

to the hop growers?

Editor Statesman:

Salem, Ore.

delight.

the Oregon The Delatesman

"No Favor Sways Us; No Fear Shall Awe" From First Statesman, March 28, 1851

THE STATESMAN PUBLISHING CO. CHARLES A. SPRAGUE - - - - Editor-Manager SHELDON F. SACKETT - - - - Managing Editor

Member of the Associated Press The Associated Press is exclusively entitled to the use for publica-tion of all news dispatches credited to it or not otherwise credited in this paper.

ADVERTISING

Portland Representative Gordon B. Bell, Security Building, Portland, Ore, Eastern Advertising Representatives Bryant, Griffith & Brunson, Inc., Chicago, New York, Detroit, Boston, Atlanta.

Entered at the Postoffice at Salem, Oregon, as Second-Class Matter. Published every morning except Monday. Business office, 215 S. Commercial Street.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES:

Mail Subscription Rates, in Advance. Within Oregon: Daily and Sunday, 1 Mo. 50 cents; 3 Mo. $1.25; 6 Mo. $2.25; 1 year $4.00. Elsewhere 50 cents per Mo., or $5.00 for 1 year in advance.

By City Carrier: 45 cents a month; $5.00 a year in advance.

Per Copy 2 cents. On trains and News Stands 5 cents.

State Liquor Control

THE legislature is about to close and the score on liquor legislation is as follows:

1st. Bill passed to provide a state convention to adopt or reject the federal amendment for repeal of the 18th amendment.

2nd. Bill defeated to resubmit repeal of prohibition provision of state constitution.

3rd. Beckman beer bill defeated.

It is probable that by initiative the second proposition will be submitted. If it is carried the state would then be without any adequate regulatory legislation of its own. Sale and possession of liquor would be tolerated, without restric-

While the wets appear to have a present majority in this state, judging from the result of the last election, there is no clear indication of what the people want as substitute for prohibition. The legislature appears equally muddled, which may account in part for the action of the senate in defeating

The suggestion is therefore advanced that the legislature authorize an interim committee of say 15 persons who would make a study of the subject and be ready to recommend to the people some definite form of liquor control to be adopted in case prohibition is finally rejected by popular The Washington legislature has taken such action, creating a committee of nine, half "wet," half "dry" and one neutral (a poor line-up it seems to us). Oregon ought to work rather closely with Washington on the subject and if possible adopt a similar system.

There is time for the Oregon legislature to authorize such a committee by joint resolution. The dries certainly should approve it, because if constitutional prohibition is repealed conditions might soon become deplorable. Wets should favor it (except those whose only interest is financial gain) if their professions of interest in "temperance" have any sincerity at all.

A Life of Emerson

TAN WYCK BROOKS has recently had published an ex- orders. At first the outlook is grave, cellent biography of Ralph Waldo Emerson. The treatment is particularly to be commended. It partakes of the mood of the sage of Concord; and as it were recreates the Careful supervision of diet and nurshistory of his mind, its steady progress from youth to maturity and old age. It is sympathetic without being partisan; and the symptoms disappear he interpretative rather than critical.

Interesting portraits are painted of Emerson's contemporaries, especially those who came closest in contact with mitted to occupy himself in work him. There is Margaret Fuller, "an avalanche of tropical that is demanding and requires menfemininity," a mystic whose dreams were shattered in the realities of Brook Farm. There was Bronson Alcott and his "school of philosophy;" Henry Thoreau, early disciple of Emerson's who became the lover of nature and foe of convention; and Hawthorne, who had moved into the "old manse,"-"a real Sphinx, with a subterranean self buried fathoms deep in the desert sand;" and Longfellow whose funeral Emerson attended, grown so feeble himself that when he gazed on the face of the dead he said:

"I cannot remember his name, but he was a good man." Then there was Thomas Carlyle, crotchety old Scot, whose friendship Emerson prized through many years despite differences of opinion.

Emerson is not so popular as he was. The first great American philosopher, he left no system,—a hook on which to hang his reputation. His writings were more like a box full of varied gems. As he himself said: "I write anecdotes of the intellect, a sort of Farmer's Al-

The core of Emerson's life and teachings was this, as Brooks notes: "spiritual is greater than any material force, that thoughts rule the world." Emerson led the way for the flowering of the intellect in the new world. Forgotten though his essays and poetry may be, he was himself a burning intellectual force who helped transform America from sterility to productivity in the field of thought.

Boardman's Swim Chart

QWIMMIN', like the old grey mare, "she ain't what she Used to be." One realizes it when he watches the young fish of the present generation disporting themselves in the water. One who learned his tricks back in the catfish country stays far in the background while the youngsters do everything but walk on top of the water. Swimming, like golf and billiards, has been reduced to a known science. It remained for Bob Boardman, physical instructor at the Salem Y.M.C.A. to catalog the strokes and make correct swimming known to everyone.

Boardman has just gotten out a chart showing the correct technique of the eight basic and standard strokes. It makes such things as learning the trudgen crawl as easy as learning to do the polka step by correspondence. It all comes back to the same idea: "count 1-2-3, glide."

The chart is one of the unique things in print. The various positions and movements of the limbs are illustrated and appropriate directions given. It is intended for posting alongside a swimming pool for the benefit of learners and teachers. By reference to this chart they can tell whether they are doing the stroke correctly or not.

Swimming has become a real passion with the American public. Summer time permits outdoor swimming in lakes and streams. More and more indoor pools are being built to provide swimming for winter time. Boardman's chart should receive a real welcome from all who are interested in the swimming art.

Lovers of basketball are looking forward to seeing the games at Corvallis Friday and Saturday nights when the Pacific coast chamonship will be settled. O. S. C. team will play the Southern Cali-

Most communities are satisfied with one big bank scare to talk bout. Medford carries on with two: regular banks and L. A. Banks.

Time for some one to run for office on a platform of free money without cost to the taxpayers.

We do not know just how to pronounce "Jehol", but it looks Everybody happy? Yea Bo!

By Royal S. Copeland, M.D.

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D. United States senator from New York Former Commissioner of Health, New York City

DEMENTIA PRAECOX is the name of a nervous disorder encountered in certain families. Most authorities believe that the disease is increase in the number of cases of dementia praecox. At first Dr. Copeland glance this appears discouraging but the progress being made in mental and nervous disorders is really encouraging. We have a right to feel the time is not far distant when these rather distressing disorders will be overcome There is no age group for this disease. However, it usually appears before the age of twenty-five and more often between the ages of Mteen and twenty-five. It afflicts make and female alike.

Heed Early Symptoms

The early symptoms of dements praecox are vague and confusing. The sufferer complains of headache, dizzinesa, disturbed sleep, loss of sleep and bad dreams. The appetite is poor, digestion is disturbed and general weakness results. As the disease progresses, the patient becomes melancholy, anxious and conscious that he is not well.

Too often the early signs of dementia praecox are overlooked. This is unfortunate because early recognition of the disease means prompt medical attention. This greatly influences the future welfare of the sufferer. The disease should always be suspected in a person whose disposition changes. Formerly pleasant and agreeable, the sufferer from dementia praecox becomes nervous, inritable, restless and is unable to comcentrate on any subject.

Young students suffering from this ailment complain of the inability to make any physical effort to read and study. The student becomes forgetful, absent-minded and often makes foolish mistakes. He undertakes new tasks with great enthusiasm, an enthusiasm which soon disappears. Of course, this is not the only reason why students do not study.

Careful Nursing Essential If the disease is not recognized at this stage and treatment is delayed, the afflicted person becomes boastful. He makes silly, exaggerated and impossible statements. This stage is followed by delusions, which alternate with periods of melancholia.

Do not confuse dementia praecox with certain incurable nervous disthese unfortunate sufferers may be saved. Rest in bed is imperative. ing are of the utmost importance, As the sufferer becomes strenger should be encouraged to remain outdoors and in the sunlight as much as possible. He should never be pertal exertion. In certain instances, where the thyrold gland is diseased, the administration of thyroid preparations is beneficial. The doctor will advise (Copyright, 1938, K. P. S., Inc.)

Y esterdays

Town Talks from The Statesman of Earlier Days

March 8, 1908 BERLIN - Considerable sensation has arisen over the allegations of the London Times in reference to a letter sent Lord Tweedmouth by Emperor William. The foreign office here denies the assertion of the London Times that his majesty would endeavor to interfere in the naval plans of Great Britain. WASHINGTON - In response to a letter of protest against the letter to the Indiana manufacturers association pledging himself in favor of enactment by congress of a bill regulating child

Dr. J. R. Knodell, superintendent of the State Anti-Saloon league, will be here tomorrow and, assisted by Rev. E. F. Zimmerman and Rev. Reinhard, will March 8, 1928 Five desperate convicts in the state prison sawed their way through the prison roof Saturday night while the Salem Lions' club was giving a minstrel show in the auditorium, it became known yesterday. They were frustrated in their efforts to get away over the wall by other prisoners who tipped off prison officials. The five are understood to be: Elisworth Kelly, Oregon and Dewey Jones, George Holtsclaw and George Jackson.

The Woodward bill reducing the legal working day for the lumbering industry from 10 to eight hours will become effective provided similar legislation is enacted in Washington and Ida-

"Do you think the American dellar should be reduced in gold content? Why or why not? This by Statesman reporters.

Dr. S. B. Laughlin, professor of economics, Willamette univer- know there's a lot of talk about the state budget is unadulterated comes 40%; for $50,000 incomes man's pittance. what the other alternatives are. think it will help the situation per cent will not bring in enough above 60%. These rates may McMinnville, Ore. It's a bad thing to change the a bit."

HEALTH BITS for BREAKFAST "The Challenge of Love"

candidate for governor, and aft-

first poetry, other firsts: (Continuing from yesterday:) "I had kept a crude sort of jour- number, wanted to break up a nal, and as papa had stored in his mind every single camp and all incidents of account in all that seven months of persistent march, we went over it together and filled up the broken and disconnected places.

Joaquin's first dollar,

"He insisted that it would be was with him early and we of interest some day. But it was burned with the house and all its contents some years later. I see that my birthday is set down in knees and the oxen were wilful some books for 1841, and in oth- and unruly; but we stuck to it, ers for 1842. This comes from the breaking the ground matted with oss of the Bible. For when I was rose roots. I was at the same time first in Europe and some began breaking and subduing the obstinto ask when I was born, papa ate oxen and I did not care for gave the former year, according my feet and legs. We did not to his recollection of the trivial stop for lunch and when we got event, while mother insisted on up to the house and watered and the latter, both giving the same unyoked the oxen my legs began day of the month,"

4 5 5 The reader will recall that in for supper, as I wanted to go resterday's installment of this home. But he looked up and told series, Joaquin called himself the me I had done finely with the 11 year old one of the three boys oxen, thanked me kindly, asked who arrived in Oregon with their | me to come early in the morning parents in 1852. So he must have and then putting his hand in his credited his father's version of pocket handed me a big silver the proper date of his birth—as dollar; my first, my very first perhaps, strangely, being the most dollar. I clutched it, caught in my interested participant in "the tri- breath with wonder and exultavial incident" of his birth. A copy of "Who's Who in America" of a and hard on my dollar till I had number of years ago gave the laid it in my mother's lap, where date as November 10, 1841. 2 2 2

Joaquin Miller in the volume

being quoted said he was "born covered wagon, pointed west." Wagner, his biographer, suggested some allowance for poetic license; that the statement may not have been literally true -though the family was on the move at the time, in a covered wagon, pointed west on a short eg of the journey that finally ended in Oregon. For they had been headed this way for some 10 years. At one time, their intended start was delayed by news of the Whitman massacre in 1847. giving them a scare concerning dangers of Indian troubles. Who's Who in America" persistently called him Joaquin Cincinnatus Heine Miller. That was wrong. His mother bestowed his second moniker in honor of the good doctor who attended at his birth. He was Dr. Hiner. Joaquin's right name was Cincinnatus Hiner Miller, after the Roman dictator who was recalled to high command from following his plow, and the country physician who performed the high birth services. The makers of the book listing outstanding Americans in point of worthwhile activities and attainments, could not imagine a more appropriate given name than that of the great Jewish German poet, Heinrich Heine; but he mother could and did. mother would deny her right, even questioning her sense of proportions-if she might be thus highbrow and critical?

* * * Mrs. Sarah Hunt Steeves of Salem, who has written and is writing biographical and other matter to be printed in books, visited in the section where Joaquin Miller was born, along with her husband, Dr. B. L. Steeves, This visit was a few years ago. They found by the side of the highway leading from the considerable city of Richmond to the town of Liberty, Indiana, near the last named place, a tablet, placed there by residents of that state.

5 5 5 The tablet, fixed to a large boulder, informs the wayfarer: "Joaquin Miller, poet of the Sierras, was born in Union county, Indiana a half mile east of this memorial, November 10, 1841.

Died October 17, 1913." The inscription shows that the tablet was placed there in 1919. Mrs. Steeves was sufficiently interested to secure two photographic views of the tablet, which she brought home and treasures.

5 5 5 The inference is either that the Indiana people who had the tablet prepared took the word of Joaquin's father for the correct year of his birth, or perhaps trusted to the memory of some old timer in the neighborhood Beveridge child labor bill, Presi- who remembered the event, or dent Roosevelt has addressed a had reliable information from some one there who did.

Resuming the text: "We got some sheep to keep on the shares, and Jimmy (the younger brother), with his new dog, kept with them all the time, but the saucy little coyotes would just sit down round about and watch and wait for the lambs, and get them almost as fast as they came. Oncedeliver several addresses in local he heard a lamb bleating piteously away up overhead in the bright blue sky, and lifting his eyes he saw a great black winged eagle making its way to the mountain top with a little white lamb in its clutches. The old primal contention of nature was still with us, even in happy. peaceful and prolific Oregonthe survival of the fittest-fight-

> 'We two bigger boys wrought out in the fields, milked the cows other blind man. In other words night and morning. Mother made it was the blind leading the blind. the butter. Papa walked to and Members of the 1933 Oregon legfrom school, far away in the islature, do you insist upon cram-

"About this time our nearest neighbor, a learned, good man, content of the gold dollar, changing the standard of value we've had. That is inflation. It may be though, that it would be the lesser of two or three evils."

Otto A. Hartman, jeweler: "I don't think so. I don't think have incomes over and above that would be the proper thing at what is needed for subsistence this particular time. I don't fa- and existence. Let's not ask the would mean inflation." These vor any change along that line poor to feed the poor, the blind questions were asked yesterday just now. Of course, there's a to lead the blind. question there, you know."

J. O. Becker, farm worker: "I duce sufficient income to balance "That just, depends upon inflation, but I honestly don't piffle. If income rates of 2 to 8 50%; for $100,000 incomes and moor. She looked self-conscious and "I've been waiting tea, John Wolfe had to get back."

CHAPTER FORTY-TWO

Jess sat down on the grass with her arms about her knees. "Was he ---

"What, Jess?" "Angry?"

"Angry! I never saw a man more pleased. I told him you were out impertinent and abrupt nose this ed under their light lashes. indeed!"

Jasper Turrell was in his grapehouse at Beech Hill, nosing about in his keen, mistrustful way, his long lips puckered about the stump of a cigar. Turrell never fully enjoyed the good things that belonged to him, simply because of a natural meanness and thinness of disposition. Nothing ever quite pleased him. He was forever grumbling at his gardeners, and suspecting them of selling fruit and vegetables behind his back. He made a habit of counting the peaches and nectarines on his trees, and any discrepancies had to be explained. If a friend admired his roses, he would sneer bitterly and say, "Nothing can't make these men of mine prune and syringe properly." He was forever discovering ugly insects under the stones of life, focusing the one gap in a bid of ming." gorgeous flowers.

"Mother washed my feet and legs, washed them in warm water "Are you there, Dad?" and milk and maybe with silent The younger Turrell's figure tears. She put me to bed after showed through the glass, distorted supper and next morning I was up slightly by crinkles in the panes. and away at work with the oxen. "Hallo, Tor ---"

5 5 5 Hector Turrell's typical attitude "We had no newspapers as yet was one of lounging self-satisfacin reach of us, and the mails were tion. He was, what many a poor only weekly and were very uncercad desired to be, the ideal of imtain in unsettled weather, but there were rumors in the air possible dreams on thirty shillings a week. Young Turrell had his fists about new gold mines to the south, on the way to California. stuffed into the pockets of his riding breeches, his black-and-white-These new placer mines were in what is now called the Rogue rivcheck waistcoat hunched up over them. He stood with his feet wide er country. The right name is Red river, so named by the early French explorers."

"I have just picked up a bit of (Continued tomorrow.)

"News, ch!" The Safety "That chap Wolfe had put up his plate in Navestock." "Bosh!" "It's true. Young Kinnis told me

> Jasper Turrell's red eyelids came Letters from > > round in his mouth. that? Surely Threadgold had an Navestock, sir. I don't hold with agreement ----" "What about old Crabbe? "He may have taken the chap up.

This particular meeting of the Navestock Guardians was destined te be memorable by reason of its implications. Robert Flemming held tious complainthis usual place as chairman in the big, padded-leather chair, his fine trying to think of, Mr. Wilks." floridity and whitening head deserving the brush of the portrait ter, Mr. Hubbard."

Wolfe had been gone an hour when Jess came back from the ways had a fistful of papers, which Robert Flemming turned his head he sniffed at attentively, much like this way and that, gravely, quesshy, but was able to smile and a squirrel devouring a nut. Landry tioningly. Turrell lay back in his shake back her hair. Mary Mascall and Petersen, two country mem-chair. was still sitting under the cypress. bers, sat side by side, exchanging scandalous stories in gloating un- self in your hands, gentlemen." dertones. The other members were tradesmen-heavy men who took man of Mr. Turrell's position to their duties with a serious eye on control his own property." personal economics. Old Crump, the clerk, leathery, pink-gilled, and he had cracked an unusually fine on the moor somewhere. He told way and that like an old dog castme to thank you and to say he is ing about for a scent. He was a I'll look into it, and have a proper as proud of Turpin as — Angry, cynic, and it delighted him to see opinion." people lose their tempers. when it fell to him to read a cer- it. Crump was scribbling in a book. tain formal letter that had been The Guardians decided that he addressed to the Navestock Guar- should acknowledge the receipt of dians. The letter complained of a the letter, nothing more. They pass-"nuisance" in George Lane, and the ed on to discuss certain items in writer desired to have the "nui- the workhouse accounts.

force its way into the room. like what they should have been! I him inquisitively, but they shirked meeting Turrell's eyes.

> "George Lane, is it, Mr. Crump? And from Burgess the cobbler?" "That's the signature, Mr. Flem-

The silence was full of hesitancy. Turrell drew in his long legs, and sat up with a jerk of defiance. "I am not shy, gentlemen. It seems that someone has a quarrel with my property. Let us have it out. If anyone wishes to discuss my management of my property-" He looked round insolently, ready to thrust a challenge under his neighbours' noses. But though Turrell was an unpopular man, he was the chief of a clan, and his fellowclansmen knew it. It was a subtle emetic. question of self-preservation, and these men of property instantly apart, and his lower jaw thrust drew together when the interests the diamond panes of the window. of property were threatened. A common instinct made for unanimity. Like members of a big family and stood in the doorway. they might quarrel among themselves, but they rallied and drew together when one of the clan was threatened by an outsider.

Johnson the butcher, the colour gruffly from a corner.

close together. He twisted the cigar Mr. Turrell's a gentleman who can ital. be left to look after his own prop-"What the devil does he mean by erty. We shake along very well in rell." mischief-making."

> sandy whiskers. He and Johnson to it. had a proper understanding. ed from face to face.

"Has anyone-Wilks's thin and acrid voice cut

"It appears to me to be a vexa-"It nails the thing to the coun-painter. The room was a dull room "Like a bad coin, sir. I always with long, melancholy windows say that things ought to be done sat on Flemming's right, his long stirring up had blood. The men of

By Warwick Deeping

"I am quite content to leave my-"I think we can leave a gentle-Wilks's eyes twinkled as though sardonic, had mischievous twinkles nut.

in his porcine eyes. He turned his Turrell's half-closed eyes gleam-"You can leave the matter to me.

They had carried the question He had a chance that morning thus far, and there they dropped sance" abated. The details were put From the meeting of the Board with strength and savour. Crump of Guardians, Jasper Turrell went sniffed as he read it. A familiar straight to Dr. Threadgold's house and penetrating odour seemed to on Mulberry Green. Threadgold was out, and Turrell was offered the Crump took a delight in setting urbanities of the new assistant, people by the ears, provided it Mr. Talbot Tweedy. This young could be done delicately and with- man wore spectacles, and had someout personal inconvenience. There thing of the look of a very wise was an uneasy scraping of feet, a guinea-pig. He was badly spotted tilting of chairs. Queer, slanting with acne, and simpered like a glances were thrown at Jasper Tur- nervous girl. Turrell had no use rell. His fellow Guardians watched for him. He sat down and said that he would wait for Dr. Threadgold.

Turrell had to wait an hour; full time to think himself into an ugly temper. When Threadgold came in, buoyant and effusive, bumping like cork on the froth of his own cheeriness, the very shine of the man's face made Turrell savage. "Look here, Threadgold, I want you to go round to George Lane." "I will go round this evening." "You'll find nothing to quarrel with. But I just want an opinion for form's sake. You understand?' Turrell went straight from Mulberry Green to George Lane. Discretion was not in him when he was angry. He never restrained himself, and his passions were Old Burgess was at work in his shop, his bald head visible through The tap-tap of his hammer went on steadily. Turrell gave one stare

"Hallo, you don't like this neighbourhood, Burgess! How's that?" The cobbler glanced up with a sulky, browbeaten smile, His squatting, rounded figure with its white this morning. He's up on Peachy of his own raw meat, spoke up apron and blue shirt sleeves seemed symbolical of Labor erouching "Mr. Chairman, seems to me, sir, half rebelliously at the feet of Cap-

"You ought to know, Mr. Tur-

An insolent slyness glimmered in Burgess's eyes, and Turrell, whose Turrell smiled, his long mouth soul was sinewed with insolence, erinkling curiously between his understood the look, and reacted

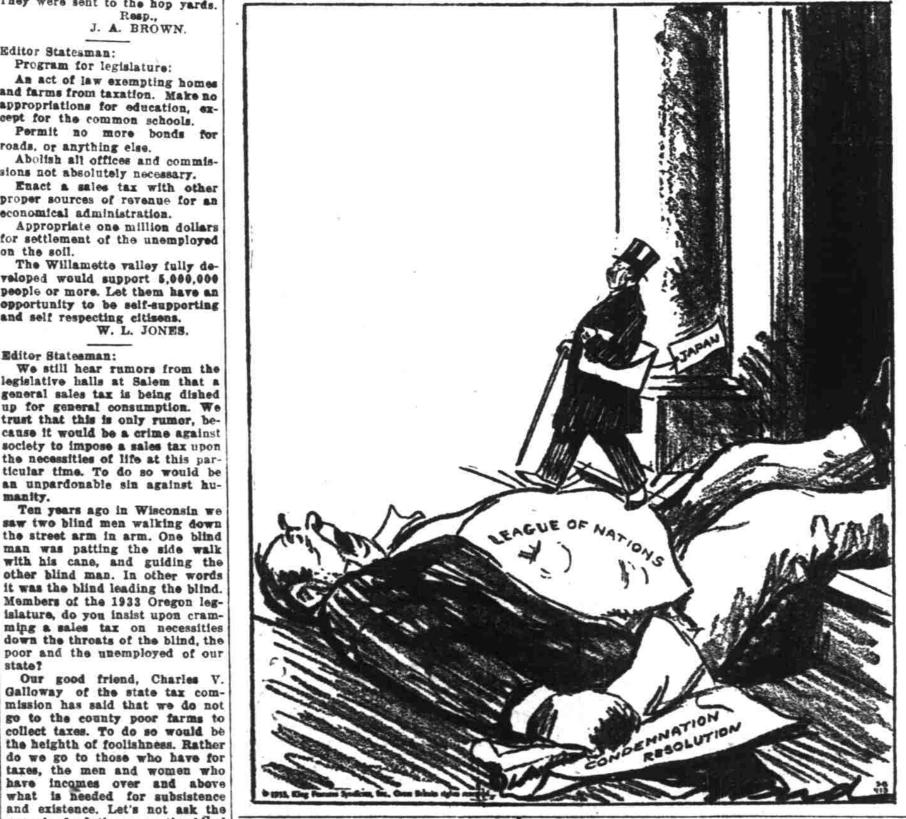

"You have been put up to it. Robert Flemming's eyes wander- I know that, You have made your bargain. Clear out in a month." "I was just going to say, sir-

"I don't want to hear what you were going to say. You have notice to quit, and that settles it. I am not going to have mischief made "Tss, that's the very word I was behind my back. I'm not the man to stand it. He walked on with fuming self-satisfaction.

looking out upon a yard. Terrell with good feeling. I am against Distributed by King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Picture of a Little Man Strutting His Stuff

raising the percentages? For net preferable to impose heavy inincomes of $5000 per year sug-gest a tax of 20%; for $19,000 sizable incomes, than to attempt revenue, why be so coy about sound drastic but we submit it is Feb. 27, 1933.

C. BEECHER SCOTT.

LARWOOD, March 7 - Mrs. incomes 30%; for $25,000 in- to pick pennies from the poor Lillie Tichnor spent the past week in Portland with friends and relatives. Lee Gaines also made a trip to Portland to procure parts for repairing his water wheel.

SPENDS WEEK IN PORTLAND