

Reed Wins Wild Mat Bout; Chair-Wielding is Questioned

REFEREE FINDS NOTHING AMISS

But Many Fans Claim Robin Bashed Bulldog; Jones Defeats Mitchell

At the climax to one of the wildest grappling shows ever staged in Salem, Robin Reed was awarded a victory over Bulldog Jackson Tuesday night at the armory, when Jackson failed to re-enter the ring after being tossed out with Reed's famous flying head scissors. Jackson claimed, and many fans thought, that Reed, who went out on the floor also in losing Jackson out, clubbed Jackson over the head with a chair while they were out in the crowd.

Reed did pick up a chair and they were at close quarters; but Referee Vern Harrington by awarding the bout to Reed ruled that it enabled Reed to lift the Alaskan out across the ropes in the same motion. Jackson took the second fall with a hammerlock.

Reed won the first fall also by tossing Jackson out of the ring with a "sonnenplane" the Reedsport editor claimed he had just invented; a sonnenberg aimed so that it enabled Reed to lift the Alaskan out across the ropes in the same motion. Jackson took the second fall with a hammerlock.

Henry Jones defeated Jack Mitchell in the one-hour bout, but did nothing to endear himself to the fans while he was about it. In the first place Jones held up the show for some time, due, it was said, to car trouble at Oregon City. Jones also had his troubles with the referee; and throughout the bout, he constantly nagged Mitchell to avoid the necessity for wrestling.

Jones won the first fall with a half wristlock and body press, Mitchell the second with a Boston crab and Jones thirteenth with a headlock and body slam.

A boxing bout between "Mickey Mouse" and Wayne Baker filled in part of the time before Jones arrived. The bout was called a draw.

The show drew one of the biggest crowds in the history of wrestling here. There was a "queue" awaiting tickets in the rain at 8:15, half a block long.

Y. TRACK TEAM PLANS ACTIVITY

Burgess Ford to be Coach; Good Meets Promised For This Season

Burgess Ford, experienced high school and college track and field coach, has taken over the task of directing the Salem Y. M. C. A. track team for the coming season, and reports that prospects for a strong season with practically all of Salem's golf activity concentrated in one spot, the Salem Golf club course, the idea seems more feasible. The Statesman will organize a team just as soon as it hears somebody else is organizing one.

We read in the Medford papers that there is a boxing contest going on down there. Yes, and everybody in Jackson county seems to have been enrolled recently, though many are not panning as vigorously now as they did a few weeks ago. Oh, Reading on, win the story refers to a goldpanning contest, but anyway we stick to our story, that a lot of plain and fancy panning has been going on.

And they claimed that the panning contest was bringing Medford a lot of publicity. That goes both ways, too.

Turn a flock of athletes loose to practice whatever the current sport happens to be, according to their own gait; then watch them and you'll find each one is practicing the part of it that he does well, not the part that is difficult for him; at least that's what Coach Keene tells his coaching classes, and we have noticed some things that appear to corroborate it.

But take the case of Lou Finney, all-arms-and-legs outfielder who went up from Portland to garden for the Athletics this year. Down in Fort Myers, Fla., they are saying that Finney will make the Philadelphia fans forget about Al Simmons.

It is recorded that Finney, when he joined the Ducks last year, was a little weak against southpaw pitching. So Lou, instead of dodging the portside, hired all the left-handed youngsters he encountered to pitch to him, and gave them a special bonus if they struck him out. All this happened in his spare time and it's said Finney's hands frequently were blistered when he showed up at the park, from too much bat-awing in odd hours. So, in case Mr. Finney should go places with the A's, that's something to remember about him.

CURT COMMENTS

PARRISH SQUAD WILL BE GREEN

With prospects for one pretty fair battery but the rest of his squad an unknown quantity, Harold Hauk, baseball coach at Parrish junior high, is anxiously scanning weather forecasts in the hope of finding conditions favorable for a few workouts prior to the opening game of the season, which is little more than two weeks away.

So far, the Parrish baseball squad has not been able to do any outdoor practicing, and Hauk visions an initial game in which he will have to instruct some of his boys which end of the bat to grasp. There are some lakes on Olinger field, and it will take several days of dry weather to bring about satisfactory playing conditions.

Damas, a catcher, is the only member of the 1932 squad available for this season's campaign; but Nick Serdotz, who pitched some good ball for Salem's American Legion Junior team which Hauk coached last summer, is in school and ready for action.

Parrish will play in the northern division Marion county B league, but the only other schools having baseball teams are Gervais and Hubbard. There will be two games with Leslie and some other contests.

The schedule as drafted to date is: April 14, Gervais here. April 21, Hubbard there. April 28, open. May 5, Gervais there. May 12, Hubbard here. May 19 and 26, Leslie.

Sizing Up the Senators

By BURNLEY

ONE looks toward the Washington Senators—and what does one behold but a dazzling, almost blinding burnburst, like the political cartoonists employ to get across a stunning idea. In this case, the idea may be labeled PENNANT.

The idea burns hotly in the Senators' camp, and sends its auroral circles far and wide over the baseball horizon. Even our own dear spotlight of fandom is taken in by its luxuriant glow. We've got to string along with the rest, and say that the Senators look good enough to finish first or second in the American League. That's how they look.

From where we sit, it is hard to find a weakness in the aggregation that owner Clark Griffith has dialed out for Joe Cronin to serve up this season. There's great hitting ability, fine pitching, top-notch fielding and caniness no end. The team looks as if it can move along swiftly under all that power.

Firing Practice Will be Started By Pistol Class

Actual firing practice is scheduled to occupy the attention of an advanced group of pistoliers at this evening's marksmanship class of the local reserve officers' rifle and pistol association, it was announced Tuesday by Lieut. Robert S. Ratcliffe, range officer for the club. With 37 officers taking an active interest in the pistol school, the indoor range at the armory would not accommodate the entire roster of gunners, so arrangements are being made to permit sections to fire at intervals, the first section being listed for tonight, Lieut. Ratcliffe reports.
