COL. WASHINGTON ROEBLING

PRES. CHESTER ARTHUR

BROOKLYN BRIDGE AS IT IS TO-DAY

Brooklyn Bridge, the world's most famous span—with the possible exception of a few old-timers recall the event, bringing in his train a brilliant galaxy of foreign diplomats. There was much speechmaking and a display of fireworks. Col. Roebling was the lion of the hour and his home the mecca of hero-worshippers. During the first 24 hours the bridge was open, 250,000 persons walked across it, paying one penny each for the privilege. Up to the administration of Mayor Gaynor of New York, tolls for vehicular traffic were maintained on the bridge. They yielded a sum of $23,224,000 until their abolishment, almost paying the huge cost of construction.

ROOSEVELT AWAITS SIGNAL TO INFLATE

The securities would be bought from the banks whose portfolios are bulging with them. Cash would replace the bonds in the bank vaults. To make a profit on this money, the banks would have to lend it to industry, thus providing the latter with the means of increasing its output. That, in short, is the way the administration believes the plan would work out.

In addition, the inflation rider authorized the chief executive to issue new currency to the extent of three billion dollars, to insure adequate free coinage of gold and silver at any ratio he deems advisable and to reduce the value of the dollar, in terms of commodities, by decreasing its gold content.

For the present, however, administration advisers are convinced Mr. Roosevelt plans to make use only of the credit expansion provision. He said, himself, in Sunday night's report to the people that "these powers will be used when, as, and if it may be necessary to accomplish the purpose" of increasing commodity prices and bettering economic conditions generally.

GRAM SEEKING TO HALT FISH STRIKE

ASTORIA, Ore., May 8.—(AP)—An attempt to end the fishermen's strike that has tied up the canning industry of the Columbia river for more than a week was still being made early today at a conference between Charles H. Gram, Oregon labor commissioner, and representatives of the packers, the fishermen and the Astoria chamber of commerce.

A recess of the meeting, which began early last night, was taken shortly after midnight. Then, with packers and chamber of commerce representatives excluded, Commissioner Gram held a closed meeting with the fishermen alone.

Packers, who were standing by waiting to return to the meeting when notified, said they had raised their offer from 6 cents a pound for Chinook salmon to 8 1/2 cents, had offered a year's moratorium on debts the fishermen owe the packers and had agreed to take back all cannery workers who walked out last week in sympathy with the gillnetters. The packers said they would not agree, however, to "firing" all of the strikers who stepped in when the cannery workers walked out.

The gillnetters, some 4,000 strong, who have kept their boats off the river since the season opened May 1, appeared to be still unyielding in their demand for a price of 8 cents a pound, the packers reported.
