MOLEY MISSION IS MYSTERY

RAYMOND MOLEY and HERBERT B. SWOPE

SECY. HULL, JAMES M. COX and REP. REYNOLDS
Washington is speculating as to the reason for Assistant Secretary of State Moley's hurried dispatch to London. It is thought that while Secretary of State Hull will continue as official head of the U. S. delegation to the World Economic Conference, his subordinate will direct the delegation's activities. Top shows Professor Moley sailing with Herbert B. Swope, former New York publisher, and lower the "Big Three" of the U. S. delegation at the conference.

Bits for Breakfast

was a mulatto, owning considerable property; a good man and kind neighbor. It is said he settled north of the Columbia because of the law against the immigration of negroes passed by the legislative committee of 1844. Minto spoke of this. Not only did that man, branded as a negro, but with as white a heart as ever a good neighbor had, help "at least 20 families" of the 1844 immigration in getting across the plains—he helped many more struggling families fresh off of the plains and penniless, as they came to establish their first homes north of the Columbia. Mr. Himes went on, writing in part of 1906 conditions he saw on his trip to attend the anniversary of the 1841 Fourth of July celebration:

"Passing through the fertile and well cultivated valley of the Nisqually, one of the most productive regions of western Washington, the first old landmark I saw was the site of Fort Nisqually, a Hudson's Bay Co. post established in 1833. The dwelling there, now occupied by Edward Huggins, who came to this identical spot early in 1850, was built in 1854, and is in an excellent state of preservation. Mr. Huggins succeeded to the management of the Hudson's Bay Co. affairs about 1859, upon the retirement of Dr. William Fraser Tolmie. Amid the reunion of many old time friends and acquaintances (at the memorable anniversary celebration) the writer met more than two score of persons whom he had formerly known, but had not seen before for from 40 to 50 years. . . .

"This celebration was a most memorable event, one long to be remembered in the annals of the Pacific coast. . . .

"The monument erected at this time should be the forerunner of a series of monuments or tablets to mark ALL spots or places of historic interest in the state of Washington, for the benefit of future generations."

In following that good advice, the people of Washington have been more diligent than those of their parent state, Oregon; though much progress has been made on the south side of the Columbia since 1906.

If Oregonians were as faithful in this field as Californians are, they would build up an asset worth now and in the future vast sums in the way of tangible returns, to say nothing of the satisfaction all should feel over the pride of living in the state that led the way in adding an empire to the American domain—the territory west of the Rockies.

Northwest Vetch Seed Rates High; Crop Very Short

Highest recommendation for the vetch seed produced in the Pacific Northwest as compared with that from other sections of the country has been given in a public statement by Rowland McKee, specialist in forage crops with the United States department of agriculture, according to word received by the farm crops department at Oregon State college.

Hairy vetch in particular from this section has been going to the southern states to be used for green manure crops. Observation of results there and elsewhere led to the high rating given northwestern seed. Such a short crop of vetch is

GOOD HINT

About this time of the year when Mr. and Mrs. America are thinking of Summer vacations, this reminder may come in useful. It isn't much use remembering that you neglected to stop milk and ice deliveries when a thousand miles from home—even though your lapse may make a bit hit with the cat. Incidentally, why not take Kitty along?

In prospect this year because of the unusual winter, that many are advocating that Oregon growers retain practically all of it for replanting for seed purposes in this state, with a view of meeting the increased prospective demand likely to follow acreage reduction of a surplus crop, particularly cotton.

Reach for a Lucky

—for always Luckies Please!

My husband introduced me to Luckies

He had no objection to my brand of cigarettes. But, one day he asked me to try his. Well, I did—and I've been saying "Luckies Please" ever since. And it's not merely because Luckies taste fine and are ever so mild. Let me tell you the real reason.

My cigarette is a personal, intimate thing with me. After all, it touches my lips—and I do take pride in my sense of daintiness. Naturally, "Toasting" means to me even more than it does to a man—for purity is something very precious to a fastidious woman.
