The Oregon States man

"No Favor Sways Us; No Fear Shall Awe" From First Statesman, March 28, 1851

THE STATESMAN PUBLISHING CO. CHARLES A. SPRAGUE - - - - Editor-Manager SHELDON F. SACKETT - - - - Managing Editor

Member of the Associated Press The Associated Press is exclusively entitled to the use for public tion of all news dispatches credited to it or not otherwise credited this paper.

ADVERTISING

Portland Representative Gordon B. Bell, Security Building, Portland, Ora. Eastern Advertising Representatives Bryant, Griffith & Brunson, Inc., Chicago, New York, Detroit, Boston, Atlanta.

Entered at the Postoffice at Salem, Oregon, as Second-Class Matter. Published every morning except Monday. Business office. 215 S. Commercial Street.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES:

 Mail Subscription Rates, in Advance. Within Oregon: Daily and Sunday, 1 Mo. 50 cents; 3 Mo. $1.25; 6 Mo. $2.25; 1 year $4.00.
 Eisewhere 50 cents per Mo., or $5.00 for 1 year in advance. By City Carrier: 45 cents a month; $5.00 a year in advance. Per Copy 3 cents. On trains and News Stands 5 cents.

The Big End of the Telescope

WESTBROOK Pegler, the clown of journalism, whose sa tire is frequently a delightful feature of the Oregonian, has undertaken to analyze for obtuse citizens like our selves, the virtues of the latest experiment, "noble in purpose", which a new administration is now launching in the U. S. A. Pegler ventures upon heresy when he turns hiskeen irony on this democratic counterpart of prohibition; because ninety per cent of the bankers and industrialists are throwing their hats in the air over this "new deal". Such unanimous support is what makes us severely critical of the plan; for bankers are generally dumb and industrialists always greedy.

The only way for an orthodox economist to go along with the president is by standing on his head. Pegler however makes that unnecessary by simply labeling the plan an "upside down plan". Here are his initial paragraphs:

"Many persons will have trouble understanding the upside-down plan of economic recovery whereby the government will reduce the cost of living upward because eleven million people find the present low cost too high. The upside-down plan may not be at fault, however, as much as the mental habits of the citizens who have been accepting traditions as knowledge for many generations and cannot easily adjust themselves to new

"The right side up plan seems to have developed rather serious defects and it may be that the commissars have a better idea after all. No government ever tried doing everything upside-down before and the scheme of paying certain citizens to abstain from work, of spending one's way out of debt and raising the cost of necessities to people who couldn't buy them even if they cost only half as much, has the merit of originality and possibly some other merits, too".

Pegler's may be a sour note; but this is not the first time in history when people profess to have seen a new heavens by simply looking through the wrong end of the telescope.

some salty tears over the ending of the Mary Pickford building, Ferry and Commercial romance with Douglas Fairbanks. This marriage seemed the streets, 21 years ago: General answer to the complaints of Hollywood's marital instabili- Odell then postmaster, followed ties. Now it too has crumbled the same as the alliances of by R. H. Dearborn, A. N. Gilbert, the brothers Mdivani and Doug Fairbanks, Jr., and Joan Crawford. Mary and Doug have grown old in the films; but after 14 years their paths separate. Just another Hollywood romance shattered on the rocks of incompatibility.

These performers live in a dream world. Their lives are not normal. In their heyday the world lies at their feet. and in houses of ill fame, report-Luxuries beyond their youthful fancies are lavished about ed to council; addition of officers them. Their whims are given the force of royal decree. Add to these factors the "artistic temperament" which seems naturally to attend persons of genius in the arts, and the reasons are apparent why love seems only a matter of cellu-loid to those of the movie colony.

There was hope for a time that the business deflation which affected the movie empire as well as other lines of business, might steal some of the false glamor and the dazzle which attended the sudden rise of Hollywood. It was thought that shortened salaries might give a more wholesome outlook on the real world to those who dwell in the heights of Beverly Hills. Why shouldn't movie stars settle down to a distinct profession with lessened incomes, and less chance of the personal disaster which usually attends fortunes quickly gained? The prospects seem dubious at the moment; for the old fever seems to be reviving. And for another thing, the press agents of the movie stars and their producers will not give them the privacy which normal living requires.

The Eagle and the Sword

TTERR Hitler is still busy with his new deal for Germany. The newest deal is to change the art work on the Prussian scutcheon. People well remember the old bird which adorned the Kaiser's stationery, riding pants and dinner plate. It was an up and coming bird, standing on its hind legs with its wings thrown back bravely. It had a scepter in one of its front legs and an orb in the other; or were these | By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D. | measures are taken the life of the things balanced on its beak?

Hitler, who has been busy chasing the Catholic orders around the lot and issuing orders to the Protestant churches to hoist the Nazi flag, has not neglected Prussian art. So he is changing the Prussian eagle over. Instead of showing the bird with a scepter and an orb, the bird will henceforth "grasp a sword as a symbol of peace and a ray of lightning as a warning to enemies". We are sure the other nations will catch the significance of the "sword as a symbol of peace". It has been that all down the ages. The world well remembers the German sword of 1914 and the kind of peace it started out to spread over Europe. Hitler's sword looks very much like Wilhelm's sword, and the blade edge is quite as sharp. Perhaps in the German schools the copy book maxim: "The pen is mightier than the sword" will now be changed to: "The sword is the symbol of peace". The remainder of the world should extend its thanks to Herr Hitler however. He spared it the hypocrisy of an olive branch in a turtle dove's mouth.

Drownings instead of auto accidents account for most of the fatalities of the July 4th holiday. Driving or riding over 500 miles during the week-end and the holiday we failed to see a wreck, encountered no drunken or reckless drivers, and noted a very general observance of rules of the road. Perhaps people are learning to avoid those short cuts to heaven which the auto can supply.

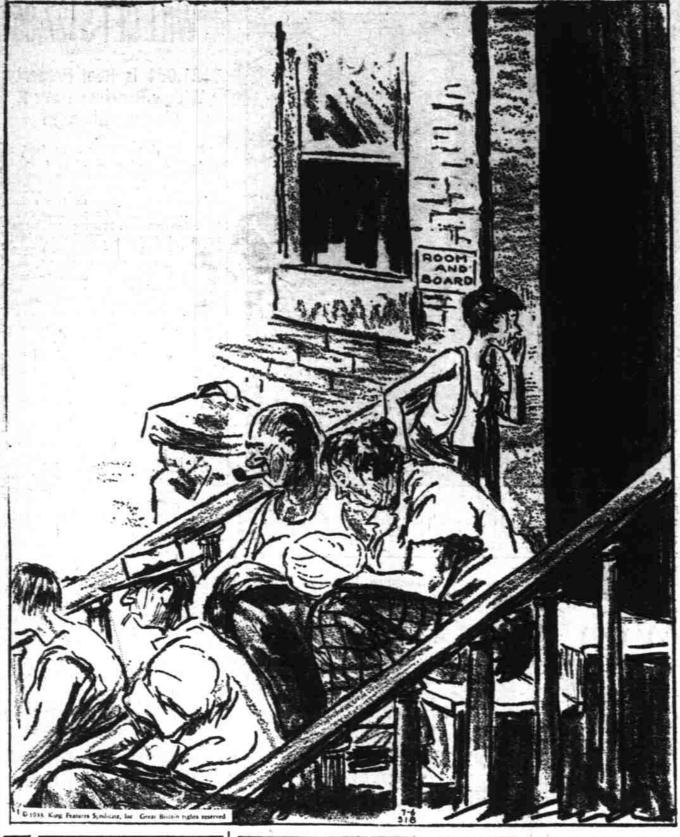

The saloon is not going to come back, say the friends of "true temperance". So it seems; but have you noticed the new neon "tavern" signs along the highways? "There is a tavern in the town,

The public isn't worrying much over the kidnaping of Jerome Factor (Jake the Barber). The supposition is that Jake got his fortune by methods not much different in ethics than those practiced by his abductors.

The men of fifty and up who got kittenish at family picnics on the Fourth of July and tried playing baseball, now feel like they had been through an auto wreck.

The oldest rock writing in the state has been found over in Lake county. Odds are even that when translated it will read,-"I love you" or "please remit".

"Come Quick, Mom, There's a Breeze!"

Yesterdays . . . Of Old Salem

Town Talks from The Statesman of Earlier Days

July 6, 1908

B. F. Bonham, E. A. Hirsch and Squire Farrar, incumbent.

Police not enforcing ordinance prohibiting leaving teams untied on streets, nor ordinance prohibiting sale of liquors on Sundays urged to meet situation.

July 6, 1923 Rotarians to battle Kiwanians in baseball game tonight at opening program of 14th street city playground: Governor Pierce to one of speakers.

Detroit on Santiam river.

Harding and party embark on U. naval transport Henderson, bound for Alaska.

LIVE WIRES PICNIC DAYTON, July 5-Fifteen members of the dependable Live Wire class of the Evangelical Sunday he was practicing law and editing numbers, when Geo. L. Curry, aftschool and their teacher, Miss Lu- the Index, in Silver City. Bancroft cille Fisher enjoyed a picnic at says in a note: "Toward the close L. S. Lerenzen's grove on the of his life, he deteriorated through bank of the Willamette Saturday the influence of his political as-

United States senator from New York

Former Commissioner of Health,

New York City

est was aroused by the story of two-year-old Helen Vasko. This child

Dr. Copeland

was the victim of a disease called if operation was delayed. I am glad and little Helen is now comfortably

Glioma is rarely seen in adults, simost always appearing in infancy and early childhood. The tumor involves the retina of the eye and grows rapidly. In its growth it spreads to the brain along the course of the optic nerve. The opposite eye parts of the body. Little hope for repeat perative. When recognized in its or no significance.

the child has been saved.

may become affected.

when surgery is applied.

lignant tumor of

The parents of the child besttated to allow the surgeons to operation and it that the malady told the child's life was doomed

the eye.

RECENTLY NATIONWIDE inter-

BITS for BREAKFAST

4th of July In Salem, 1846:

(Continuing from yesterday:) Twenty-first anniversary of W. G. T'Vault, orator of the day ment legislature made Col. The Last Romance Shattered

The Last Romance Shattered

The Last Romance Shattered

CENTIMENTALISTS among the movie fans will shed 1843 and came across the plains to Oregon in 1845. He was cap- giving the Oregon country its tain (or colonel) of a covered first regular mail service. wagon train of 61 wagons and 300 people starting from St. Jo- pointed one of a committee or exseph, Mo.; John Waymire, lieu- press of three men to go to Soda tenant, and James Allen, sergeant. He was a lawyer, energetic, ad- sist the endeavors of men with venturous, foremost in many ex- sinister motives to turn immiploring expeditions; a strong par- grants bound for Oregon to Caltisan with southern democratic ifornia. The committee took the proclivities. Possessing literary abilities, he had something to do Jairus Bonney, who had been with early newspapers, first with misled the year before and winthe Spectator, Oregon City, first newspaper west of the Missouri river, as president of the Oregon burn. Truman Bonney was the Printing association, and as its great grandfather of the Bits first editor; afterward as editor of the Table Rock Sentinel, first newspaper in southern Oregon, and later The Intelligencer. He City files for water rights on was in the legislature of 1846. three sights between Niagara and After Oregon became a territory, he served again in the legislature, and was speaker of the house in TACOMA-President and Mrs. 1858. Twice he was prosecuting attorney of the first judicial district, in which was Jackson county, to which he had removed after and Col. T'Vault lasted as editor the discovery of gold in the Rogue river valley, and held other public positions. When the mining boom was at its height in Idaho, sociations, and lost caste with his victim can be saved. If overlooked or neglected, the afflicted eye is soon destroyed, the tumor rapidly spreads and the disease is then beyond the Removal of the Eye and complete enucleation, or removal of the eyeball. Of course, this is a drastic operation, but it is the only means of saving the life of the young

After removal of the eye, the child is fitted with an artificial aye. This

I can appreciate and well under-is asked to give permission for this decision. But if you are confronted Immediate operation will save the vision of the normal eye. It will ment of the child and prevent ultiers whose children had been af-

Answers to Health Queries

for blackheads? 2: I am 14, 5 feet 1 inch tall, how much should I weigh?

your age and height as determined

A .- Diet and elimination are imflicted in a similar manner.

The operation consists of prompt control of the surgeon.

operate. They may be so perfect that it is often dif-feared she would ficult to distinguish the normal eye was their belief stand the hesitancy of a mother who might be cured operation. I hope it may never be without an op- necessary for the reader to make this

But they were with this problem there is only one decision to make.

not survive the from the artificial one.

to say that consent was finally given permit normal growth and developconvalescing. The operation was mate misery and anguish. This state-successfully performed and there is ment is borne out by the many let-every reason to believe the life of ters sent to Mrs. Vaske from moth-

The tumor is of the malignant va- portant in the correction of this dis-cancer may find its way to remote envelope for further particulars and cure can be held when the optic weigh about 108 pounds. This is nerve is seriously involved, even about the average weight for one of

It is for this reason that early by examination of a large number of recognition of the disease and early persons. A few pounds above or removal of the afflicted eye is im- below the average is a matter of little early stages and proper surgical (Copyright, 1933, K. F. S., Inc.)

riety. It grows rapidly and like true order. Send self-addressed, stamped

Daily Health Lalks

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

fellow pioneers. He died of smallpox at Jacksonville in 1869." The 1845 provisional govern-

Institute" (Salem), thus

In 1846, Col. T'Vault was ap-Springs, beyond Fort Hall, and redepositions of Truman and Dr. tered at Fort Sutter. The Bonneys had settled on the site of Wood-

When Col. T'Vault delivered the 4th of July oration in the town that was beginning to be known as Salem, he had just lost, or was about to lose, his position as editor of the Spectator, because he was too lenient with the Hudson's Bay's company's interests. Its first issue was on Thursday, Feb. 5. only through about 10 issues, its publication being every two weeks then. H. A. G. Les became editor, and lasted through only nine erward governor, got the job, and lasted very much longer than either of his predecessors, but ere long had to walk the plank for allowing an article to appear criticizing Samuel R. Thurston, candidate of the Methodist faction for delegate in congress, to which position he was elected.

Jan. 7, 1851, William Hamilton was shot and killed by William Kendall in a quarrel. Kendall had jumped Hamilton's land claim, southeast of and near the present prison annex, not far from the site of the town of Turner. Federal Judge William Strong convened a special term of court March 28, in the chapel of the Oregon Institute (that by change of name became Willamette university), and Kendall was defended by Col. T'Vault and B. F Harding, attorneys, the latter afterward secretary of state and U. S. senator, etc. But land claim jumpers were anathema marantha in the Oregon of that day, and Kendall was convicted, and, on April 18, hanged. Where? About where the Roberts apartment house is now located. Winter near Ferry street. Any way, there was nothing else to do with the claim jumper, for that was before the first wooden jail of Marion county was built, some yards west of the place of the gallows. Shortly thereafter a sailor named Cook was shot by Wm. Keene, a gambler. Keene was also tried by Judge Strong, convicted of manslaughter, and sentenced to six years in the penitentiary. As the ury had decided that he ought not to hang, and he could not be confined in an imaginary penitentiary, Governor Gaines pardoned and children. him. There were several similar pardons, and some more hangings sold by the sheriff to the highest had plenty of fighting; T'Vault mission) and Fort Walla of the

"STOLEN LOVE" By HAZEL LIVINGSTON

"I never thought about self-respect at all. So that's why I didn't tell you. I was sever going to tell you—until you said that about Connin-about Connin-not being bad enough to pretend."

"Joan don't torment me—you can't mean—Joan!"

She dropped her eyes then. The red burned her cheeks, her ears, her throat. She had been so steeped in suffering for him she had forgotten this, the pain of telling. . of having him know.

He began to walk up and down, his hand pressed to his twitching mouth. When he spoke again it was with his back to her, looking out of the window, into the dark. "So it was true. An anonymous letter to tell me. And I believed you. ."

He turned around and faced her from his corner. "You looked into my eyes and said it was a lie. ... Joan . . how could you?"

At first she didn't understand. Then it fisshed over her, sickly. He thought she was trying to say that she had lied about the silly letter, "No, not yet. You must give me time—to think it over..."

"No, not yet. You must give me time—to think it over..."

Annie had been listening in again.

"Because—hang it—we haven't made up our minds. You scapperate need himmended himself together with a treemendous effort. Forced himmended himself together with a treemendous effort. Forced himmended himself to speak naturally. "Bait make you of home alone wait a minute, I'll take you."

"About breaking the engagement," after no anyway, I don't want tends your fast, speaking very will be med as if it mattered how she got home. As if anything that will make it easier for you. I'm sorry I didn't easier for you.

"No? Something else again— want Joan, why have you done this to you—me? Haven't I always been—" about loving me so much—"

She heard him groan.
"And I couldn't bear to tell you

"But it was a lie, Curtis! It was!"
He came nearer. She saw the flicker of hope in his eyes, the hope that he had misunderstood after all, that she was being hysterical over nothing, over nothing at all—
"Oh no, no, no!" she cried. "Don't touch me, Curtis! Don't come near me—don't think I'm imagining on the tous."

"Please—not now," he said dully.
"I'm not sure yet what we ought to do. Please wait. Tomorrow—"
He turned and ran down the stairs, leaving her.

The coffee was bubbling in the percolator, and Annie had brought the muffins, deep yellow puffs, brown on the tous. me don't think I'm imagining

He was gripping her arms, hurting her, hurting her unbearably.

"Go on—don't stop—who was it? Who was it, I say! "Just a boy—a boy I knew. We loved each other, Curtis. I never had any love before. My aunts you know—they didn't love me. I never had any friends. Not even a dog, Curtis, or a kitten. There was a kitten once, it came to the house . . . all black with a little white dot under its chin, and a little pointed pink tongue . . . Heeley . . . Heeley killed it . . ." Her voice broke. "I don't see what a cat has to do with it." "No, not only the kitten. Every-thing, Curtis. The loneliness.

Everything so quiet and echoing and hostile. They were all so old, my aunts and Heeley and the house. And I never knew anyone young. Just read books, and dreamed. "And then this boy-came-and

It will hurt so much thinking about you not understanding—all the rest of my life . . . I don't ask you to forgive me, but couldn't you just try to understand why I didn't tell you?

Couldn't you do that, Curtis?"

Large! How could yeless room? You couldn't seemed large to me "Very well, if you don't to understand why I didn't tell you?

"Uses room? You couldn't seemed large to me "Very well, if you don't wouldn't you do that, Curtis?"

"Do you have to do But he just sat there with his head turned away from her, his slamming down the newspaper and face in his hands. His voice came, muffled. "Where is he now?" "I don't know."

Silence again. A long, aching silence. Joan waited, white and frozen and lonely. More lonely than she had ever been before, for make up your minds. Marcia Fuller still blazed, brightly in the sun. Curtis was lost to her now . . . Curtis who a few short minutes ago had loved her . . .

They both stared at it, trying to find comfort in its bright hard loved her . . .

They both stared at it, trying to find comfort in its bright hard beauty. Maisie frightened, still stuloved her . . . "I don't know what to say to you," the muffled voice went on. "What have you left for me to say? Oh Joan—te think that you—you—"

She could see his shoulders shaking. Was he crying? Did men cry? She wanted to put her arms about his poor shoulders, and comfort him ... tell him how sorry she was, how sorry . . . But he would not want her arms any more, and besides they were too stiff and cold to be thought she was trying to say that she had lied about the silly letter, about the sailor. . . "No, not yet. You must give me time—to think it over—" "But there's nothing to think over! It's all decided. Oh, let's not put it off, let's break now—you don't want me—after what I've told

Her coat lay over the book-case She went over to it, and put it on. He lifted his head.

"But I can't think now. My head "Yes always good to me—too good, Curtis, That's why I couldn't tell. I thought and thought. I've been nearly mad trying to decide. One day I'd think I should tell you—and then you'd say something—about loving me so much—"

She heard him groan.

"And I couldn't bear to tell you them to do that—"

"But I can't think now, My head—all gone—I'll take you home, Joan, Tomorrow or the next day—"

So she let him drive her to Maisie's door. She even let him give her back the ring. "I'd rather you would keep it if you don't mind. Wear it. Please do. People will wonder if you don't. We don't want them to do that—"

"And I couldn't bear to tell you then...so I didn't..."
"You lied to me, Joan. That's what I can't forgive. When I told you about the letter—" on the tops.
"Please—not now," he said dully."

"Annie, will you see if Mr. Bar-stow is coming? He's never late!" But Lyla had almost finished her breakfast before he came down. 'Morning!" he said cheerfully. A little too cheerfully she thought. A bad sign when he was late.
"You aren't feeling well," she said anxiously. "Oh Curtis, I hope it isn't another sore throat. You're so careless, always slopping about in wet feet, and it has rained so much this year."

"I'm quite all right, thanks." He drank the hot, strong coffee greedily, and pushed the little brown sausages he liked so much, away untouched.

"You haven't told me about the girl did not move. apartment. Did you like it?"

It was then that "Hmm?" "Curtis, please put down that paper. I'll have to telephone to Mrs. Fuller. She'll want to know if you're going to take it!"
"Won't tomorrow do? We—well the fact is, we didn't decide defi-nothing seemed to matter but that.

Do you understand, Curtis? I'd large."

Large! How could you do with "Large! How could you do with less room? You couldn't possibly!

> "It seemed large to me."
> "Very well, if you don't like it I'll "Do you have to do it this mo-ment?" he demanded irritably, pushing his coffee cup aside. "Certainly. I explained to Joan that they're going to Europe for two broke your engagement, you foolish years and they want to know at girl!" once. I can't understand why she didn't tell you, and why you couldn't blue hand on which Curtis's ring call you this afternoon."

"I'm going to be busy this afternoon. I can't be concerned with personal affairs during office hours. Besides, I'll be in court most of the pened, I think you're a mighty silly doesn't work in a jail. She is not too go take a warm bath an' a good cold rushed to speak civilly to me—" shower, an' I'll have breakfast "Mother will you please be reason- ever did see . able? And please don't call Joan-" like that . . .

sympathetically.

Lyla rose majestically. "No, thank you, Annie."

Annie had been listening in again.

Brrrr . . . Brr . . . Maisie stirred in her sleep.

heavens, the doorbell! A fine time of morning for the doorbell . . . she opened one eye reluctantly. Sun! Sun streaming right on to her bed! She'd overslept again. Darn that cheap alarm clock, you couldn't depend on it. Must be nine o'clock, and Joan still asleep . . . Her fat feet plumped into the pink satin mules Mis' Harvey had given her for Christmas, she pulled riven her for Christmas, she pulled the lavendar corduroy robe around her generous figure, and groped her way to the door.

"Yes, who is it?"
But whoever it was had gone.
"John-nee!" she called from the bathroom where she was trying to wake herself with vigorously splashed cold water. "Johnnie! I've overslep' again—it's late!"

Just one minute to put the coffee on-and she was back at Joan's door. "Johnnie-get up this min-ute-I'm awfully sorry-I overslep'-"

"Well," she sputtered, when she had opened the door, "what does this mean?"

Joan lay face downward on the bed, one limp hand dangling. She wore the thin dark dress she had worn the day before. The wind from the window stirred its folds gently. There was something about the way she was lying . . . something about the curve of her neck. . . . Maisie stood teetering on the doorsill. Fascinated. Unable to go forward or back. Another puff of wind lifted the thin dark stuff of the dress, but the

It was then that Maisie screamed Maisie's scream rose thin and curving, curving around the limp hand that dangled from the bed, curving into Joan's consciousness, bringing her back . . . back from the blackness in which she had floatpeaceful blackness, in which there were no thoughts, no memories, no tears

"Gosh!" Maisie panted. "I thought-I thought for a minute-Her warm hands were on Joan's cold shoulders, lifting them. "You gave me an awful turn, lying there so quiet, with all your clothes on . . . Johnnie . . . tell Maisie . something happened! Tell Maisie!" And then in a high, scolding voice she cried, "You haven't gone and

Joan held out her hand, the limp

"It's not indefinitely."

"Well, this afternoon then. I'll mottled and anxious. Joan's white and expressionless. A mask of a face out of which her eyes looked unnaturally dark and brilliant.
"Well then, if nothing's hap-

"Very well," she sighed. "I'll talk night with your clothes on, catching to Joan about it. Fortunately she your death of cold . . . Now you lost part of his scalp. The south- Hudson's Bay company than in plane here, it was made known western Oregon coast Indian all the former portions of their Tuesday. General de Pinedo, who tribes were a scrappy lot, from the beginning of exploration and set-

(To Re Continued Tomorrow)

Col. T'Vault was in the famous, campaign of 1858, when, in the zenith of his power, Joe Lane's supporters, after a hot fight, carried the state by 2149 majority, with only four whigs elected to the legislature, two in each house -all the rest being democrats. In each judicial district a democratic prosecuting attorney was elected, Col. T'Vault being one of them That was the last such victory in Oregon for a long time. The republican party was about to be organized, to combat the issue of slavery, threatening to bring on the war of the states that fol-5 5 5

Peter H. Burnett, who delivered the oration at Oregon City on the 4th of July of 87 years ago, had a greater career than that of the orator at Salem, Col. W. G. T'Vault.

He came with the 1843 immi gration, leader of a large-party from what was known as the Platte Purchase in Missouri. He was from Weston in that state. Jesse, Lindsay and Charles Applegate and Daniel Waldo were leaders of another large party, from St. Clair county, same state. Other parties, under T. D. Kaiser, Jesse Looney and Daniel Matheney swelled that epochal first covered wagon train to cross the plains all the way to Oregon to an army of about 1000 men, women

Peter H. Burnett was elected captain in chief of the whole agin that period, and one man was gregation, and J. W. Nesmith or derly sergeant, and nine councilbidder, and turned loose by the men were chosen to make and enman who bought him, just before force the rules as binding as laws. his term of sentence had expired. On the Big Blue river, Burnett resigned the chief command, and Col. T'Vault about this time be- Wm. J. Martin was elected capame part owner of the new town tain of one column and Jesse of Port Orford, along with Capt. plegate captain of another. At In-Wm. Tichenor and four other dependence Rock, and at Fort Hall, further divisions in com-He had headed a party of 23 mand were made. More hardships explorers and Indian fighters who and sufferings were experienced went to the Curry county coast in descending the Columbia, after country in the fall of 1851. They passing Waillatpu (the Whitman

2000 mile journey; almost in sight of the promised land many were saved from perishing by the of July from Floyd Bennett field, help of Dr. John McLoughlin. (Continued tomorrow.)

INSTALLS ROBOT PILOT WILMINGTON, Del., July 5 .edo, Italian pilot, is having a tour the entire country in three "robot pilot" installed in his air- weeks at reduced rates.

New York, for Teheran, Persia, is supervising the installation. Railway tickets being sold in AP)—General Francesco de Pin- Belgium permit passengers to plans to take off before the end

NOTHING DOES SO MUCH FOR SO LITTLE AS YOUR TELEPHONE

A telephone serves every member of the family

Mother, with her household errands and messages. The young people, with their school activities. Father, keeping in touch with work and business opportunity.

A single emergency of fire, illness, accident, may make it worth more than it costs in a lifetime.

At any time the ring of its bell may be all-important. A telephone costs but a few cents a day.

THE PACIFIC TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH COMPANY Business office, 740 State Street, Phone 3101