Y Campers Meet Gun Totin' Women, Say; Return Home After Successful Outing

While other members of their camp were paying an overnight visit to Camp Merrivether, Portland Boy Scouts' summer stronghold, and finding that supposedly Indian conclave clean and peaceful, a group of younger boys with their leaders from Salem's Y. M. C. A. camp at Oceanside Monday hiked to a little resort town and reported they found women "totin' guns" in approved wild west fashion. The town is Bay Ocean and the guns were no advertising stunt but the outward and visible signs of a feud of long-standing—high onto 25 years, "natives" told the boys.

"We camped on the 'honest' side of the town and our boys were asked to shun all acquaintance with dishonesty and to stay there by the headman of the 'honest' group," said Monte Jones and Delvia Neiderheiser yesterday in relating their experiences. But there was a playground across the road in the promised land and the lads forgot all warnings.

Both sides welcomed their visitors, each trying to outdo the other in courtesies. The feud began over land squabbles, continued when the community water supply was shut off from one side of the town, and now centers around the use of water systems. Chief points of interest for the boys were the old natatorium and the big hotel, built to accommodate summer visitors and abandoned when unpleasant relations among the citizenry made it unprofitable, said the visitors.

After hiking 16 miles to Camp Merrivether the older boys were ready to make leisurely investigation of the grounds where huts representing the types of architecture of the Portland tribes of Indians house the Portland patrol. Fine swimming in the lake and a big bonfire were also enjoyed.

All Earn Awards
At their own campfire Wednesday night, awards were made for individual accomplishments. All boys earned the camp and first aid insignia, most of them receiving also additional awards for either handicraft or nature study.

PRE-ELECTION ROW CAUSES ONE DEATH

HARLAN, Ky., Aug. 4—(AP)—Armed with rifles, tear gas bombs and sub-machine guns, state troops patrolled the streets of Harlan last night as a result of a pre-election fight earlier in the day in which one man was slain and several others wounded, one probably fatally.

The militiamen had the situation "well in hand" shortly after being called to duty by Mayor L. O. Smith, the mayor said. Smith said he took the action to prevent what threatened to be a serious clash between opposing political factions in Saturday's primary elections.

The outbreak precipitating the calling out of troops, occurred that morning at Kenvir, 12 miles from here. Sheriff John H. Blair said Robert Roark, 35, was shot to death and several others wounded during a fight in a house where a ballot box was kept.
