M. B. Kester, 75, Goes Into Yard and Fires while Daughter Away

HUBBARD, Sept. 22 — (Special)—Milton B. Kester, 75, member of a pioneer Marjon county family, committed suicide this morning about 8:30 o'clock. Leaving the house when his daughter Lena had departed for about 15 minutes, he went into the yard, placed himself under a tree and inflicted the shot through his temple from a .32 calibre revolver.

Coroner L. E. Barrick of Salem was summoned, but said no inquest would be necessary. Depondency due to old age is presumed to be the cause. The body was removed to the Miller mortuary at Aurora.

Lived Here for While Kester was born in 1858 on a ranch a half mile north of Hubbard, the son of J. J. and Keziah Kester, pioneers from Indiana and Illinois, respectively. The pioneer family lived in Salem from 1863-64, while the father was engaged in the cordwood business. From here, J. J. Kester went to Chemawa on a timber ranch. Some of the pieces of timber he hewed there were 80 feet long, and were used in construction of Reed's opera house in Salem.

M. B. Kester attended the old Claggett school near Chemawa and a school at North Howell prairie, and later at Hubbard after the parents returned to Oregon from a short stay in California. Later he opened a livery stable in town, and in 1888 he rented the Hubbard homestead and engaged in farming for many years, specializing in hogs, and in 1923 he purchased a chicken ranch and became one of the most successful poultrymen of the valley.

In 1885 he married Miss Mary A. Dimick, also of a pioneer family and who died in 1887. A daughter, Lena, survives and has been housekeeper for her father. Mr. Kester had filled all the chairs of the Knights of Pythias lodge and wore a jeweled emblem for 25-year service.

Now All Cane Has to Do Is Hop in Pails

BRUSH CREEK, Sept. 22.—Five hundred one-gallon buckets arrived here this week from the American Can company branch at Portland. The buckets were consigned to Alden and Rachel Klopfenstein, brother and sister, who have during the past several months completed a sorghum molasses factory in this district.

Last spring the Klopfensteins beguiled several farmers of this district into planting sorghum cane. The cane, it is reported, thrived well, and harvest will begin the first of the month.

The sorghum business is new to this district, but not to the Klopfensteins who have had considerable experience in this line in the middle west, and their father, M. J. Klopfenstein devoted most of his adult life to the making of sorghum molasses.

The fame of the local industry has already spread far and many inquiries for their product have reached the Klopfensteins.
