"I Cover the Waterfront" Is Exceptional Story; Theme for Song

One of the year's outstanding pictures, "I Cover the Waterfront," opened at the State theatre last night to an enthusiastic audience. Claudette Colbert has never been more appealing than as the independent daughter of a dissolute old smuggler, played by Ernest Torrence. The latter's dramatic death scene seems to have been prophetic as this was his last

Ben Lyon plays the part of the resourceful young reporter who covers the waterfront. The movie has been adapted from the famous novel by Maz Miller, who spent years as a reporter on the San Diego waterfront and who obtained first - hand experiences which he recreated in his sensational novel. So popular was the book that a song by the same name sold thousands of copies and was played by every orchestra in the country. The picture has all of the popularity of the book and song and has run to smashing success wherever

The latest invention in radio construction to attract the attention of engineers and experts in many sections of the country has been announced by L. S. Stenerson, 2410 Turner Road, Salem, The Invention, Stenerson said, resulted from his failure to hear an address of Senator Hiram Johnson of California a few months ago.

Radio engineers declared that Stenerson's invention promised to be revolutionary in the radio industry.

Stenerson explained that the wner of a radio set might want to tune in on a number of programs on different stations at different times during a single day. This would be simple under Stenerson's invention. The owner merely would go to his radio early in the day, make certain key or plug adjustments, and then forget about it. When the time for the programs arrived the radio would tune in without being touched. The device can be attached to any radio set.

Stenerson said he had applied for a patent through Washington attorneys.
