Dancing Artists Portray Real "Poetry of Motion"

By MARY TALMADGE HEDRICK

The tribute of prolonged applause and repeated encores testified to the success of the sensational dance concert presented by Michio Ito and his troupe Tuesday evening at the Grand theatre under the auspices of the McDowell club.

To the large audience this eagerly awaited program proved to be even more excellent and rich in dance gems than had been hoped for.

Each member of this troupe is a distinguished exponent of his or her own style of the dance, making it a memorable occasion for Salem people.

Michio Ito, who has been called by critics "the prince of motion of the world," proved himself an artist of originality, his every slightest movement having meaning and beauty. One of his most outstanding numbers was the Japanese dance, "A Pair of Fans," which was probably nearest akin to his real personality. This interpretation was the one which first made him famous. In two tone poems Ito expressed the emotions of fear, reluctance and defiance, and his "Tango" by Albiniz was repeatedly encored.

Most effective of the Ito numbers on the program, however, was the closing number, "Plizicati" by Delibe, which was suggested to him by Pavlova, to whom it is dedicated. Without moving his feet from the floor, the beautiful motions of his hands, wrists and arms, were fascinating. The effectiveness of the number was augmented by weird shadows in the background.

To the Japanese each graceful motion of the wrists and hands carries a spiritual meaning. Ito has been called "Japan's spiritual ambassador to the Occident."

The phrase "poetry of motion" took on a real meaning to me in the exquisite grace of Lillian Powell, especially in her balloon and scarf interpretation of the "Ballet Sentimentale." A delightful contrast was the quiet "Fanchin" "Passepied" by Delibe, danced by

How Grand Slam Could be Made

By MRS. WILLIAM H. QUINN
Statesman Tourney Conductor

One of the most interesting hands at Tuesday night's tournament was board number one. A grand slam was possible in this set of hands for north-south, although not one pair bid the grand slam. Six couples bid and made six hearts. Mrs. Quinn herewith explains the bidding and play.

The hand:

The bidding:

4♥(2)	Pass	4NT(3)	Pass
5NT(4)	Pass	7♥	Pass

(2) Promises adequate trump support.

(3) Forcing bid. Shows three aces or two aces and the king of hearts.

(4) Shows other two aces.

The play:

Opening lead jack of spades by West. The play follows: North takes jack of spades with queen of spades, returns queen of diamonds for a finesse, but East covers, South taking the trick with the ace; takes two rounds of hearts (trumps)—the second lead being retained in South position by the king. South now plays the ace and king of clubs—returns to North position with a small trump to the eight-spot.

North now plays the jack of clubs and discards the losing four of diamonds.

Lead in North hand: North plays nine of clubs; East covers with the ten, and South trumps.

(1) If West discards a diamond, South returns to North hand with a spade, returns ten of diamonds, trumps with ten of hearts, West's jack falls and nine of diamonds in North's hand is good, with the ace of spades as a re-entry.

(2) If West discards a spade, South cashes North's ace and king of spades returns to South hand by trumping ten of diamonds, and the 15th spade is good.

Couples who bid six hearts and made the contract, only one of whom made seven hearts, were Mr. and Mrs. Clayton V. Bernhard, Mr. and Mrs. Ercei Kay, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Huston, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Abrick, Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Blanchford, Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon F. Sackett.
