

CRABTREE WRITES TEXT SUPPLEMENT

And Furnishes Pictures for Farming Book Used in Rural Classes

SILVERTON, Oct. 11.—Silver-ton is particularly interested in the special supplement prepared for pupils in the state of Oregon and incorporated in the Hoover-Pittman "Profitable Farming" used in the eighth grades of rural schools, for it was prepared by Warren E. Crabtree, director of vocational agriculture in the Silver-ton high school.

The supplement contains 31 pages, and is entitled "Oregon, an Unusual State." The reason for the title is explained in the third paragraph: "There are few areas in the United States which show such a wide range of climatic and environmental conditions as the state of Oregon. The Pacific ocean on the west, the high, dry plateau of more than 4,000 feet elevation on the east and the various mountain ranges rising at times to altitudes of 13,000 feet, all combine to create striking differences. West-ern Oregon is featured by mild and moist winters, eastern Oregon by low precipitation and humidity, high evaporation and wind velocity, considerable sunshine and extremes of temperature."

This last chapter in the book of "Profitable Farming" is divided into six regions: Coast lowlands; Willamette valley and adjoining Cascade sections; southern Oregon; Columbia basin; Blue and Wallowa mountain areas, and central, east central and lake regions. Each region is treated separately. There are 18 photographs and one "Rainfall and Crops Distribution" map to illustrate the chapter on Oregon. Some of the photographs were taken about Silver-ton by Mr. Crabtree and by June Drake. Others are from various parts of the state. The text itself is very readable and contains much information of interest to the adult as well as the younger farmer.
