A Remarkable New Book

History, Fact Stranger Than Fiction A Volume That Will Evoke Thought in All Nations

Words from its title page: "Bethel and Aurora, an Experience in Communism as Practical Christianity, with Some Account of Past and Present Ventures in Collective Living, by Robert J. Hendricks."

The average man who thinks on such things believes a near approach to the millennium is more than a million years in the future, because, as he sees it, that space of time will be required to bring about radical changes in human nature—to banish selfishness and self seeking from the heart of the race.

This book relates the historically true story of a community in Missouri, Washington and Oregon, starting in Pennsylvania, that in one short generation drove out as with a whip of scorpions the last eidolon, the remotest vestigial remnant of selfishness and self seeking.

How was wrought this miracle of a millenium?

By obeying the Ten Commandments, notably the Ninth.

By strictly observing the fundamental Law of Love.

By putting into practice the precepts of the Sermon on the Mount, including the Golden Rule.

By following the Diamond Rule, absolutely necessary complement for the successful life of a community in which property and labor and their usufruct are held in common.

By adhering to the implications of the words of the Master at Jacob's Well.

By holding inviolate the lessons of the Parable of the Good Samaritan.

By supporting the statute which as it were formed the foundation stones of the structure of their federation of freedom from worry and want and worldly care, "From every man according to his capacity, to every man according to his needs."

By keeping to the principle involved in the affirmative answer to the first recorded social question of history, put to Cain, first son of earth's first parents, by the God of Creation Himself—"Am I my brother's keeper?"

By laboring, day after day, to fulfill the meaning of the Perfect Parable.

By performing the requisites of the highest article in their own Constitution, adopted when they began community living, "to do good to the poor."

In short—by practicing Christianity; not merely professing it, as the mounting millions before them had done; and have continued doing up to now.

There are many golden threads running through this remarkable and refreshing book, arresting, compelling, gripping. They will hold the interest of the thoughtful and even the casual reader, everywhere, from the first to the last line.

One of these golden threads is an accurate account of the historic plains covered wagon funeral procession.

It was the only one of its kind. It could not have been duplicated. Another like it in setting can never be.

In a brief paragraph: 50,000 anxious home seekers were ready to start toward the Oregon Country in 1855. Indian troubles held them back through warnings of U. S. dragoons. Only two wagon caravans passed the cordon—one the Keil colony train, the other captained by a man named Jackson, from Tennessee; each bearing about 250 souls. The Jackson train was utterly destroyed by provoked and avenging Indians. The Keil train sang its unharmful way through the very jaws of death, passing and contacting many thousands of painted and hostile savages. Like it were enshrouded by a pillar of cloud by day and illumined by a pillar of fire by night, the body of Willie Keil, in a plains hearse, was as the Ark of the Covenant in that other wilderness journey, for the strangest of all the uncounted covered wagon companies that followed the Star of Empire in its westward course—the most remarkable hegra in all history. Willie Keil died at Bethel May 19, 1855. Dust was returned to dust the day after Christmas at Willapa, over 2000 miles away.

There is another golden thread in the plodding MULE TEAM that drew the plains hearse and lives in the colony's sagas; its historicity confirmed by the records in the big vaults of the U. S. Court in Portland, Oregon; and another, the remarkable settlement of the unusual estate left by Dr. Keil, leader, its accuracy attested in the same manner—truly a romance stranger than fiction, set down in cold legal phrase.

New trails in American if not in world jurisprudence were blazed thereby—a high mark reached in freedom from the colony cardinal sins of selfishness and self seeking, never matched in all the annals of time.

Bethel and Aurora makes up a handsome book between the covers of which, first to last, with illuminating halftone pictures, are 375 large pages.
