

Legion Post Will Stage First Wrestling Show Tonight

GRUDGE MATCH IS ON PROGRAM

Lyness - Martin, Frisbie and Reilly Headliners on "New Deal" Card

Salem's "new deal" in professional wrestling will be inaugurated tonight, when Capital Post No. 9, American Legion, will introduce its first card at the armory, with the post's wrestling committee in direct charge.

Two of the bouts are strictly of the "new deal" variety and the other is a holdover from the old regime, in the restricted sense that it is a rematch of an unusually eventful bout two weeks ago.

This is the meeting of Ray Lyness and "Bunny" Martin, who battled in the arena, on its edges, and finally out behind a section of bleachers with the referee, Vern Harrington, there taking a hand. There is not likely to be any of that tonight as the district attorney has issued a warning that the boys must do all their mixing well separated from the crowd by the ropes; but that doesn't keep it from being a grudge bout of the first rank.

This will be a 90-minute bout sharing equally in the main event spot with the return here of Ray Frisbie, "heavyweight" who began his professional career in Salem and Albany and is now reappearing after gaining national recognition. Frisbie's opponent will be Pat Reilly, the Boston "bad boy," who has been taking the limelight in Portland recently.

OLSON HURT, W. U. CHANCES SLIMMER

Willamette university's football prospects, dampened severely by a setback at Tacoma Friday night, looked even darker after Monday night's practice when Manfred "Ole" Olson, powerful fullback, suffered a severe injury to his hand. There is little likelihood that he will play against Columbia this weekend. Carl Rhoda also was injured and with George Cannady already out of the lineup, the list of available backfield men is greatly reduced.

Cannady's previous leg injury was renewed on the first play he engaged in, in the Tacoma tussle. Coach "Spec" Keene reported that his men were outplayed in the first quarter of the College of Puget Sound game which the Loggers won 6 to 0, but they took the upper hand from then on and should have won.

Parrish Stops West Linn's Big Team for 12-12 Tie in Thriller; Defense is Good

Parrish junior high school's light but scrappy gridsters battled to a 12-12 tie with the heavier West Linn high "B" team Monday afternoon in a thrilling seasaw game. It took some tremendous fighting for Parrish to avoid defeat. West Linn crunched and passed its way to the four-inch line in the closing minutes of the game, and after being held there, was back to the Parrish four-yard line as the game ended.

Parrish scored in the first period when it backed West Linn up against the visitors' goal line and Porter smashed through to block a punt, then fell on the ball for a touchdown.

J. Burroughs To Direct Y. Diving Team

Prospects for the success of the Y. M. C. A. swimming and diving team brightened considerably yesterday with the announcement that Julian Burroughs, who not many years ago was a junior member of the local Y., has offered his services as diving coach. Burroughs was graduated from Oregon State college in 1926 and carried away with him from the Corvallis campus in addition to a sheepskin, a colorful record as a diver and coach of diving.

In 1922 he went to Chicago to compete with men from all over the country for the Olympics, held that year in Paris. By a fraction of a point he missed the selection, but his sponsors were so impressed with the youth's good sportsmanship and ability that they sent him home to Salem by way of New York and a roundabout trip back across the continent.

For several years Burroughs has been in Chicago; he is an electrical engineer and returned to Salem only this summer. Dwight Adams, physical director at the city Y. yesterday that not only would Burroughs coach the diving teams but that he would teach a class in diving at the association tank each Tuesday night, having offered volunteer service. The first class will be held tonight at 7:30 p. m. The diving expert's services were especially welcomed inasmuch as Salem Y. swimming teams, placing high in Y. M. C. A. meets otherwise, have for several years ranked low in diving. There has been a good deal of call for diving classes, Adams said, and the Tuesday night class for young men and boys will fit into the association physical education schedule.

Erickson Being Talked to Head University Here

An additional name being talked locally for next president of Willamette university is that of Dean Frank M. Erickson, in charge of the liberal arts school here since 1921. Erickson served as president one year during the absence in the east of President Carl G. Doney. The latter's resignation becomes effective in June, 1934.

Erickson, a Presbyterian, was a professor at the University of Idaho before coming here. He has been active in the affairs of the Independent College's association and is extremely well liked on the campus. He is professor of education in addition to his work as dean.

Huntington Eyes Linn Team As Valley's Strongest; Mistakes Reviewed

Dismissal as "over and done with" an opening game which was somewhat disappointing in its outcome but not in its revelation of strength which points to a successful season. The Salem high school football team got down to business Monday in preparation for the tough game coming up this week, against Albany high here. The game was scheduled for Saturday night but may be played Friday night.

Coach Hollis Huntington declared Monday that he believed Albany high to be the toughest team in the valley right now, basing this partly on the tie game which Albany played last week against Tillamook, the coast outfit which took all the valley eleven into camp last year.

Although time was taken out for several of the Salem high boys in the 13-13 tie game with Bend Saturday night, none of the injuries proved severe and Huntington expects to present full strength against Albany. Don Coons was carried off the field but his injury was merely a severe

CURT COMMENTS

The duck hunting season opened yesterday, at noon contrary to the usual custom for hunting seasons which usually begin an hour before sunrise. And thereby hangs a tale, as the literary fellows say. One group of Salem nimrods went out to their private lake in the Turner district, arriving about 10 o'clock. They got all settled in their blinds, with decoys in position. The lake, just a few minutes before noon, was swarming with ducks.

Then along the nearby fence strolled a pheasant hunter with his dog; the hunter honored the "hunting" sign but the dog couldn't read, and between them they scared all the ducks off that lake, and the luckless hunters listened to the banging of shotguns from other nearby lakes all afternoon. Finally some of the ducks returned, and they got a few, after all that wait.

It's bad business to holler about officiating after the game is over, and we're sure that we haven't done in this column once a year; we don't really remember one such kick that we have registered or quoted anybody as registering, though some of the boys over at Albany thought we did it last summer when that was not our meaning or intention. Yet there comes a time when the facts demand attention—when it's not just a case where an official might or might not have erred, but one in which the stories of numerous witnesses point to out-and-out robbery on the athletic field.

In the third period of the Willamette-Puget Sound game at Tacoma Friday night "Wienie" Kaiser caught a pass within a foot or so of the goal line. Two College of Puget Sound men leaped for the ball but, according to the story we get from several sources, they weren't near enough to touch Kaiser, who was facing away from the goal line; he simply pivoted and fell across the line, with plenty of room to spare; he could have run on out to the cinder track, as far as any Puget Sound tacklers were concerned. The referee called it a touchdown. But the umpire said the forward progress of the ball had stopped on the six-inch line, and he finally persuaded the referee it should be ruled that way.

And on Willamette's last play the forward pass that went into the end zone, Johnny Oravec was under the ball, but a Puget Sound man grabbed his arm, which of course is interference; the umpire was right on top of the play and couldn't have missed it, but he refused to call it. Willamette should have had the ball on the one-yard line and, "hot" as they were right then, there is little doubt that it would have been another touchdown.

Earlier, Oravec was called for "crawling with the ball" when he was merely digging in trying to keep his feet; that is a penalty seldom called, and then only in case of deliberate crawling after the runner is down. At various times the officials let the Puget Sound boys call the penalties. But when Cannady was injured on his first play after entering the game, it was a flagrant bit of clipping in plain view of an official, but wasn't called. All in all, it looks very much as though somebody stole for Puget Sound what now looks like a championship, though the rise of College of Idaho may change the situation.

One of the worst sides to the whole affair is that the Bearcats had "clicked" in three games without a letdown and now, prospects dimmed through no fault of theirs, it will be hard to summon the "old fight" again. And it will be needed, against the Columbia team, the only outfit to score on Oregon so far this season, Friday night.

Movies of the Oregon 6 to 0 victory over Washington arrived here Sunday night and are being shown today for the last time at the Elsinore. They are remarkably clear, though only a few shots of the high spots are given.
