"My reason for introducing the reference to wireless licensing is because we have licensing of the press now presented to us (under the NRA) and it indicates how much rights we may expect to have under that method," he said.

Within a few hours after the recovery administration turned down the newspapers' proffered code, the publisher said, he sailed for Europe on a trip that took him into Germany. In that nation he said he found exemplification of the result of government domnance of the press.

In one newspaper editorial room, he recounted, was a nazi representative originally sent there as a censor of the paper's news columns. He told how the publishers told him in confidence in a taxicab—after refusing to talk in the street, at his hotel or in their offices—that the government agent had made himself "executive editor of the newspaper in every capacity."

"I have learned from other sources," he said, "that the newspapers of Germany have not only failed in their literary functions, but are complete failures in a bus-

Describing one of the functions of the newspapers as "to furnish that check upon government which no constitution has ever been able to provide," Col McCormick said that within ten years efforts to destroy the freedom of the press have been renewed.

He spoke of/an attempt to give Minnesota, of a pending Wisconsin law which would make it unlawful for corporations to publish editorials, and of actions of judges in other states to use the

Doesn'+ Recommend Russia

Taken to Russia by his widowed mother, Mrs. Sarah Grenoff, three years age, 11-year-old American-born William Grenoff recently arrived back in New York enroute to the home of his aunt and brother in the State of Washington, after an eventful trip alone from the Soviet interior. The prodigal, who declared he didn't want to grow up a Communist, told a graphic tale of child life in Russia. Poor food, poor clothing, at the or no play and plenty of work in wheat fields just about describes it. Unable to leave the country herself, William's mother entrusted the boy to a party of American tourists who took him to Berlin, where U. S. Consul Cyrus Follmer cared for him and arranged for his transportation to New York.

Specific action to reduce salaries already has been taken in connection with loans to railreads by the reconstruction corporation. Other borrowers were also understood to have had trouble in getting funds if their executives seemed to be receiving unduly high pay.

Many economists have argued that it would be helpful if high salaries were spread in low wage brackets so as to increase the purchasing power of the people instead of increasing investments and speculation.
