Oldfield Sets Tractor Record

Roaring around the track at Indianapolis State Fair the old "master driver of the world," Barney Oldfield, recently set a new world's tractor record of 39.045 miles per hour, handling the wheel of this "iron plowhorse" with all the skill and daring that has made his name the synonym for speed.

It was an amazing race—and a strange scene, for the driver who pressed him closest all the way, and the A.A.A. timer who scored the event were sons of two great rivals of Oldfield's racing career.

The lad on the tractor was Denny Dusenberger, who is already a shrewd racing hand and has entered cars in the Indianapolis 500-Mile Classic several years. His father, the late Fred Dusenberger, automobile manufacturer and famous builder of racing creations, raced against Barney in the days when they were bicycle champions—then, on through the pioneer racing days that brought on such amazing advancement in automobiles, dating back from
