TOWN REBELLIOUS AGAINST CLOSING

Dallas Considers Pulling Down Blue Eagles in Protest of Mill Shutdown

DALLAS, Nov. 11.—A retaliatory move at NRA is planned here if the curtailment to 50 hours of the weekly operations of the Willamette Valley Lumber company is not lifted by the West Coast Lumbermen's association. The board of directors of the chamber of commerce have voted to recommend to all business houses in Dallas the removal of the Blue Eagle from their windows as a silent protest against the curtailment order.

One of the chamber directors in discussing the resolution said that firms without Blue Eagles would nevertheless be expected to comply with the contracts they have signed with the president.

A two months' total shutdown in the Dallas mill impedes unless relief comes from President Roosevelt.

For the past week the Willamette Valley mill has continued to run two shifts five days a week as it has for the past five years because official word of the rejection of the company's appeal at Washington had not been received.

However report on the rejection of this appeal is expected momentarily from Washington or Seattle.

Dallas is pinning its hopes for a rescission of the West Coast authority's order on a personal appeal to President Roosevelt carried by Senator Charles L. McNary who goes east Wednesday.

The Dallas mill is now employing 350 men in its plant here and 180 in its camp. A two months' shutdown will put the woodsman out of work for two months and only 60 men will be kept at work in the planing mill here.

Under a one-shift operation the mill would work 180 men in Dallas and 80 in camps.

The miller interests which control the mill claim 50 per cent of their output competes only with foreign, not national, lumber production. They also assert that the balance of the production of the local mill is largely in specialized domestic lines which the mill's operators have developed and which do not compete with other manufacturers in the north west.

Last night for investigation, He was taken into custody in the Yew Park district.

BURGHARDT ENDS EXTENDED TOUR

South Found Poorest Section Visited; New York Hates Inflation Move

"It's mighty grand to be in Salem again, but the rest of the country has a world of interests and scenery well worth the trip", William H. Burghardt, insurance man, said upon return from a trip which took him through more than 10,000 miles of United States and eastern Canadian country. Accompanying him was Wilson McNary. They were gone eight weeks.

Mr. Burghardt failed to find the entirely gloomy picture that some tourists bring home. The most prosperous looking country he found was the thoroughly painted, well-kept farm lands, Kansas City to Hannibal, Missouri. The length of the New England states, too, the homes were well kept, at least through the towns and over the highways he passed.

The south bore another picture.

21 Years of Service

the most forlorn and dire of the long journey. Southern homes, both in town and country, are sadly ill-kept; and the spirit of southern people is "way down". One southern merchant, who a few years ago netted $5,000 interest on his investment, considered himself lucky to be getting $1000. Cotton and peanut markets were deplorably weak. Bitterness against the president was noted in the south and in New York City, the latter especially as the inflation news was announced.

One of the first places of interest visited by Mr. Burghardt was his old home town, Lawrence, Missouri, where he went to school and college, and which he had seen but briefly once in 40 years. Through Detroit, they crossed the interstate bridge to find themselves witnessing French people plough their lands with oxen and cows. Quebec and Toronto they found fascinating.

Boston and Salem, Massachusetts, brought particular delights and many revered sites were visited, including the Olcott, Emerson and Hawthorne homes. The most beautiful spot in the whole country is Chestnut street in Salem, Mass., in Mr. Burghardt's estimation.

On the entire journey, Burghardt experienced only two half days of rain. The trip in from the south was made via the Grand Canyon. They encountered many people, especially in the south, who look to Oregon as their next home.
