NIG LOATH TO MOVE Firemen's Cat Can't Understand New Home HAMBURGER IS BRIBE

It was just too much for Nig, big, black feline mascot of the Salem fire department when firemen attempted to take him along with them yesterday to their temporary quarters at 272 North High street. Nig, who came to the department six years ago, a wet, whimpering ball of kitten fur, couldn't understand.

When the CWA crew undertook the task of tearing up the wooden flooring at central station, Nig fled. Fireman W. H. "Bill" Bechtel had to buy a nickel's worth of hamburger to entice Nig from the hideout he retreated to under the floor of a nearby building.

Today was Nig's yawning day," firemen said. Not even the fact that he was in the familiar hands of a fireman kept him from wailing up in the feline heart of Nig when he was carried into the firemen's new sleeping room. He let out many loud meows.

Once inside the new quarters, Nig remained perched throughout the day on the cushioned bench by the stove, refusing to get down and walk about on the cold concrete floor. The five fire trucks and the runabout rig will be kept in the garage facing Chemeketa street; firemen will sleep and lounge in the old Valley Motor company showroom on High. Alarm telephones have been connected up here but the alarm siren will be rung only when there is a fireman available to dash over to the old central station switch, Chief Harry Hutton said.

It is expected the job of replacing the present central station floor with a reinforced concrete; one will be completed early in February.
