Made by State College; Venture Long Time Deal With Slow Return

While the walnut growing inthe Labish offerings. dustry of Oregon has withstood the agricultural depression far better than most industries, and while there is room for some expansion under suitable conditions, siderable supply from out-state walnut growing is not recommended as a get-rich-quick enterprise nor as an investment that like weather conditions in contriwill bring big returns later to abbuting territory. sentee owners.

These facts are revealed in a survey by A. S. Burrier, farm of the produce exchange, as well management specialist at Oregon State college, and C. E. Schuster, federal horticulturist stationed at the college, in which actual cost data was gathered by trained workers on 204 farms in the state. The study included approximately for their storage goods. 75 per cent of the commercial orchards.

For a grower who is suitably situated as to soil and other fundamental requirements, however, and who is willing to start out on a long-time project and carry it hrough on a sound and economical basis, which usually means intelligent personal supervision, walnut growing is not at all discouraging.

A walnut orchard cannot be expected to return any profits until it is 12 years old, the survey revealed. Although walnuts will frequently start bearing several years earlier than that, the experience of present growers is that this scattering early production is of no material consequence in net re-

Costs are Found The average young walnut orchard in Oregon is 22 acres in size and is set 22 trees to the acre, it was found. The survey also showed that at the beginning of the 12th year, the total cost of an average young walnut orchard was $346.55 per acre. Of this amount, $157 or about 45 per cent is represented by cost of the land on which the orchard is located, while $189.55 is the cost of planting and bringing the orchard to profitable bearing age. The survey also points out important methods by which some growers have been uccessful in bringing their orchards into bearing more economi-

GOOD AT PORTLAND

PORTLAND, Jan. 17.-(AP)-Rather good demand was showing for live chickens in the local trade with prices generally maintained even for the lights and for medium sorts. Everything that wears feathers was in call.

There were new orders arriving from the east for turkeys but receipts here continued limited and most operations are now in California where the crop was late in maturing and therefore producers will benefit by the late boost in prices. Activity in the country meat trade continued keen and embraces practically all lines. The late betterment in the beef call has reflected generally increased sales of fresh meats. There remained draggy tone in the market for onions at Oregon sources with leading operators still out of the market on account of lack of response from eastern carload buyers since the price moved to $2.
