

PENROSE TO MAKE TRIP OVER STATE

In Interest of Future Farmer Work; Schedule is Outlined

AMITY, Jan. 27. — Arrangements have been definitely made to have George Penrose, student body president, and who received second place in the state F. F. A. public speaking contest last spring to make a tour of southern Oregon starting February 1. He will be accompanied by Howard Smith, president of the state association of F. F. A. of Canby.

The purpose of this tour is to attend "father and son" banquets and to promote Future Farmer work. George Angell, representative of the Oregon Farmer, is arranging to have the F. F. A. boys speak before the Kiwanis club in Portland. The expense will be taken care of primarily by the local chapters and the state association.

The two boys plan to leave Thursday morning, February 1, making their first stop at Cottage Grove. The following program will be carried out after leaving Cottage Grove:

- Friday, February 2, or Saturday, February 3 — Roseburg, either night.
- Monday, February 5 — Coos Bay.
- Tuesday, February 6 — Myrtle Point.
- Wednesday, February 7 — Bandon.
- Thursday, February 8 — Coquille.
- Friday, February 9 or Saturday, February 10 — Grants Pass, either night.
- Monday, February 12 — Henry.
- Tuesday, February 13 — Mallin.
- Wednesday, February 14 — Merrill.
- Thursday, February 15 — Bonanza.

EARNEST GIBBS IS NEW CLUB HEAD

AMITY, Jan. 27. — The board of directors of the Amity Commercial club met recently and elected these officers: President, Ernest Gibbs; vice-president, A. B. Watt; secretary-treasurer, O. E. Roth. The membership committee is A. B. Watt and J. K. Jensen; the entertainment, O. E. Roth and H. W. Torbert. At the regular meeting, the first Wednesday in February, the high school orchestra will play. The club also plans to sponsor a bus-home campaign.

A meeting of the Amity F. F. A. Cooperative association directors was held at the high school Friday. They decided that it would be necessary for them to borrow money in order to have enough working capital. The chairman, Laurance Rasaka, also reported that several dollars a ton could be saved if feed by the boys mixing their own.

Library Record Told
The record for 1933 shows that the library owns 141 volumes and 162 patrons read 3137 books and 1095 magazines. In March of last year 408 books were checked out, leaving other months, November and December each had with the number of magazines, there being 124. January 28 last year 48 books were issued and this year on January 3 89 books were issued.

CWA Workers Divide to Give Work to All

SILVERTON, Jan. 27. — In order that none might be dropped from the Silvertown payroll, E. L. McCleary, water superintendent, divided the CWA workers into two crews, with each crew allowed 12 hours a week. This will, it is hoped, take the work up to February 15 when all current projects will be brought to an end. Mr. McCleary's move was the result of a recent ruling curtailing hours of CWA work at Silvertown. By dividing the workers into two groups all could be given work.

Corn-Hog Reduction Talked at Rickreall

RICKREALL, Jan. 27. — The community committee of the corn and hog reduction campaign held their first meeting Thursday in the Rickreall grange hall. Ronald Hogg is district chairman. Others on this committee are Justin Rowland of Oakgrove, E. F. Brown of Greenwood. Hogg is also a representative on the county association board. There were more than 50 in attendance at this meeting, where Ralph Beck, county agent, was one of the main speakers.

Bits for Breakfast

The peace tent where the ill starved council was held. When the first puff of smoke arose above the council, Charley shouted to the soldiers below him, "The Madonnas are killing the commissioners!" then, dropping his glass, he started for the scene of blood, in advance of the reserve which had been ordered out.
"Meeting his father, he demanded to know whether his vengeance meant war. With some difficulty he was persuaded from going to the scene of the slaughter, nor was he expected until she appeared, coming on her horse."

Inaccuracy Has Charm in Social Converse, Facts Boring, Averred

By D. H. Talmadge, Sage of Salem

I once knew a boy who read, with considerable difficulty, that little book of Mr. Ruskin's in which he tells the world how to judge a picture. The boy read the book because his mother, who desired that his mind be improved, insisted upon his doing so and not because he wished to read it.

The boy has no definite recollection at this date, which is many years afterwards, of anything the book contained except words printed in black ink on white paper, in which respect it was much like all other books. But he thinks it must have made some impression upon his mind at the time of its reading—must have produced an oblique effect, such as Mr. Browning tells us may happen to anybody.

That the book produced an effect, oblique or otherwise, upon the boy is evidenced by the fact that a short time later he visited the art department of a school for girls at Dubuque, where under conduct of a sweet-faced sister he looked upon numerous paintings and drawings. While this tour was in progress he commented freely. The sister said little. But the boy is now aware that some of his comments were amusing to the sister, although made in perfect sincerity. She frequently drew her under lip between her teeth and held it there for a good bit before passing on to the next picture.

How silly it is for any of us to pretend to know something of which we know nothing, isn't it?

D. H. TALMADGE

Still, I suppose, circumstances may exist in which ignorance is almost excusable. This boy showed at least an interest in art by visiting the Dubuque school, which is a point to consider, and he obtained a general idea of an interesting institution, which is another point to consider, and had he not praised the paintings, one and all, no blemish would remain upon the memory. He made use of such terms as "high-lying," "depth," "perspective" and "shading," and goodness knows how many others, of the meaning of which he had only the vaguest of ideas. Perhaps even this was better than to have criticized the paintings harshly. But it would have been better for him, not being competent in the matter, to have said nothing.

He had the grace, however, to thank the patient lady who had been his guide. And then, before taking a graceful departure, he told her of a painting by a young woman in his home town—a picture of a bit of country road, painted from nature which was causing much secret laughter amongst those who looked upon it. This picture, while intended to be that of a bit of country road, had turned out to be quite a good picture of a waterfall. The boy said it was odd too, because the painter had been to some art school or other, which must have been a very bad one.

"Not necessarily," said the sister gently. "That young woman studied with us. The picture of which you speak was painted here from memory. The waterfall effect was noticed by us. But the young woman really has talent."

So, the visit having been brought to a perfect ending, the boy went on his way.

If we confined our talk entirely to facts, and were we authority upon every topic brought out for discussion, and were silent when not positive of the correctness of our statements, I fear the world would be a far less pleasant place than it is. For my part, I rather favor inaccuracy in purely social converse. At any rate, I favor, in matters of little importance but-of interesting nature, a disregard of inaccuracy. Much of the charm of individual heart and mind emerges only when the necessity for restraint is withdrawn—when the making of a slight error in place or date is not thought sufficient consequence to notice.

The punctiliously exact person may be a very nice person, and a good husband and father and all that, but he is likely to be an extremely tiresome person.

I reckon it does not matter greatly whether, for instance, a fire was discovered at 9:15 or at 9:26, yet a habitual denier has been known to utterly ruin what would have been an interesting eye-witness's recollection of a thrilling episode by insisting at length that he was correct as to the exact minute.

Cheer up! we shall always have the weather to talk about. At any rate, when there is no longer any weather there will no longer be any us.

A boy tells me he can work the crossword puzzles in this paper with his eyes shut. I think the lad has his terms mixed. What he meant to say is he can work the puzzles with one hand, which is as good a boast as the other and more reasonable.
