The passing of Mr. Hoss culminated the removal of the entire board of control which was functioning in Salem four years ago.

High officials in state government commented yesterday on their personal grief at the loss of Mr. Hoss. Their statements follow:

Governor Julius L. Meier: "I feel a deep personal grief in the passing of Mr. Hoss."

Rufus C. Holman, state treasurer: "I shall always remember the association with Hal E. Hoss as one of the bright spots in my experience as a state official."

Charles P. Pray, superintendent of state police, referred to Hoss' death as "an irreparable loss to the state."

ments in 1914 and 1916 was to repeal the home rule law giving cities the right to regulate liquor."

Jay Bowerman, assisting in the respondent's case, said there was but one thing for the court to determine. That, he said, was whether the voters had in mind in 1910 when the home rule amendment was added to the constitution.

Highway Workers Advised to Keep Out of Politics

The state highway commission, in an order issued Tuesday, warned employees of the state highway department to refrain from any political activities.

"In view of the non-partisan nature of the state highway department and the necessity of administering its functions on a strictly non-political basis in the interest of the state as a whole and to secure the greatest efficiency, the employees of the department are requested to refrain from any political activities."

"If any employee hold honorary offices in political subdivisions of the state at the present time, they are requested to relinquish these positions at the expiration of their term."

Dillinger No Terror to Woman Sheriff

Whatever lingering hope John Dillinger had of being rescued from Crown Point, Ind., jail, where he awaits trial on charge of slaying Policeman William P. O'Malley during East Chicago bank hold-up, evaporated when he saw the precautions that had been taken by Sheriff Lillian Holley, of Lake County. Sheriff Holley, who was appointed to succeed her husband, slain by a crazed farmer in Gary, Ind., is a believer in preparedness. When rumors of a possible rescue attempt reached her, following capture of Dillinger and his mob at Tucson, Ariz., Sheriff Holley armed all her deputies with machine guns and ordered them not to spare the lead should the necessity arise. She is a crack revolver shot, herself, and has taken pains to master the intricacies of the machine gun.

OREGON WILL PAY HONOR TO H. HOSS

tion of schools, Hoss had gained much practical knowledge through a various round of services working at different times as bellhop, circus roustabout, stage hand, candy maker and railroad employe.

When he was 17 years old, Hoss began his service as a newspaper worker. With slight help, he began a weekly newspaper and his duties on it included all phases of the work: editorial, mechanical and managerial.

Later he served the Morning Oregonian as a correspondent at the Tillamook beaches. In 1918 he became editor of the Clackamas County Banner at Oregon City and within two years had consolidated this publication into the Banner-Courier. In 1920 he became a member of the Morning Enterprise staff of which E. E. Brodie was publisher. When Mr. Brodie became minister to Siam under the Harding administration, he put Hoss in charge as general manager and editor of the paper.

Hoss became very active in the affairs of the Oregon State Editorial association. In 1921 he was elected its secretary and in 1923 he became its president.

When Hoss became private secretary to the late Governor Patterson, a considerable amount of his time was given to ex-officio service on the state parole board. He was made a director of the American Prison association and a member of the Federal Parole board.

Hoss decided to run for secretary of state on the republican ticket, succeeding Sam A. Koser who was banned by eight years of consecutive service. In a triangular contest, Hoss won a plurality and the nomination. September 20, 1928, Governor Patterson appointed him secretary of state to succeed Mr. Koser who resigned to become budget director. In the November general election Hoss was chosen by a substantial majority. He was reelected in November, 1932. Hoss effected material economies in the work of the office which increased annually due to the gains made in the automobile and truck business which came under his supervision.

Hoss suffered for years from a tubercular condition which became more acute early in 1933. Physicians urged rest and hospitalization. Hoss decided to stay home and give only part-time supervision to his office. Gradually his strength ebbed. Not since the turn of this year had he been at his office. Through the faithful service of his deputies and the supervision he was able to give by telephone, the office of the secretary continued to be administered efficiently.

Hoss is survived by his widow, the former Myrtle E. Lantz, to whom he was married January 6, 1914, at Tillamook, and four children, David, Jean, John and Laura. The family resides at 362 Jervis avenue, Salem. His father and mother also survive.

Had Many Friends Throughout State

The secretary of state had many friends throughout Oregon; acquaintances made during his newspaper days and friendships developed from his public service. While in Oregon City he was active in civic affairs. He was president and director of the Klackamas club, president of the Clackamas county business men's association, secretary of the Greater Clackamas union of clubs, and president of the Oregon City chamber of commerce.

He was elected to Theta Chi, national fraternity; to Sigma Delta Chi, national journalism fraternity, and to Alpha Delta Sigma, national advertising fraternity. He belonged to the Salem and Portland Advertising clubs and to the I. O. O. F. lodge.

the 1929 crash and subsequent depression and dissatisfaction which led communistic leaders to think this country was right for a dictator.

"The AAA, one of the horses of recovery, is just the people of the city putting their hands into their jeans and helping the farmer with the little gained on the NRA. As a result, $750,000,000 has gone into pockets of the farmers," he stated.

Textile, lumber and steel industries are all coming out of the doldrums as result of codes, and textile particularly is celebrating the freedom from work of thousands of children, Fisher said. So far, 210 industries have agreed to codes, putting four million persons back to work to stay and an equal number temporarily; 450 more industries are planning codes, which will put all America to work. Last Christmas three millions of dollars more were spent in the country as result of NRA money.

Fisher predicted in three years the income of American people will be 120 billions of dollars, while in 1929 the figure was only 80 billions, and he declared the whole NRA costs will not be tremendous.

CHESTER GUTHRIE DIES AT DALLAS

DALLAS, Feb. 6.—Chester Guthrie, 55, member of a pioneer Polk county family, passed away at the Dallas hospital Monday, February 5. He was born May 13, 1879, at Dallas, and married Lillian Shepherd November 16, 1902.

He was active in farming circles and specialized in the raising of Agora goats. He was recently appointed as head of the corn-hog movement in Polk county.

He is survived by his widow; one son, Cecil of Monmouth; a brother, Elmer of Salem, and his mother, Lizzie Guthrie of Dallas. Funeral services will be held at the Evangelical church at 2 o'clock Wednesday, with Rev. J. A. Stocker officiating, assisted by Rev. H. E. Kelly. Pallbearers will be Clarence Curry, Ed Pike, Howard Fleming, A. Tethrow, Rea Craven and C. C. Gardner.

King Julius Granted Big Fish Rights

"King Julius I" and the state of Oregon are entitled to legal possession of the body of Ethelbert, the whale, which was killed by Edward O. and Joseph T. Llesared in Oregon slough in Multnomah county in October 24, 1931.

This was determined in an opinion handed down by the state supreme court Tuesday in a suit brought by Governor Meier and the state to recover possession of the whale. The supreme court held that the whale was a "royal fish." The opinion reversed the decree of Judge Crawford of the Multnomah county circuit court who ruled in favor of the Lessareds.

"We think the complaint was sufficient in that plainly alleged ownership by the plaintiff and other facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for the possession of the body of the whale," the supreme court opinion read. "There is no denial of the ownership or the wrongful taking, or any part of the complaint."

"The plaintiff alleged that under the law the state is owner of all 'royal fish.' Whales within coastal and inland waters always have been a part of the king's own revenues and are dominated 'royal fish.'"

"It was stated in the brief of plaintiff, and was not challenged by the defendants, that the spectacle of a real whale at play a hundred miles inland from the sea created interest at home and abroad, and was the source of much inquiry from the press and educational institutions in other parts of the world."

"Similar events, in other countries, as recorded through the ages, were cited, and for a time Portland harbor was the object of unusual reference and great publicity. After the killing the body of the whale was placed in a tank especially constructed and donated to the state and preserved by means of donations and placed on exhibit for its educational value."
