Bits for Breakfast

Where we wandered. "As I remember, the emigrants that year were mostly from Illinois and Iowa. On May 24, 1845, we crossed the Missouri river on a ferry. I well remember how frightened I was when, as we were about midstream, a yoke of grandfather's cattle became unmanageable and jumped overboard and swam to the shore. We crossed the river at St. Joe, then an Indian agency and the western limit of civilization. Here was the rendezvous for forming trains for the long westward hike and we met a number of emigrants and formed a train. Mr. Abner Hackleman was elected captain of the train, and we remained under his charge until a few days after crossing Snake river near the end of our journey."
