ROTARIANS TOLD OF PREPAREDNESS NEED

Captain Pound Points to War of 1812, Durham to Size of Army

Captain B. F. Pound reviewed the history of national defense and Lieutenant Clark Durham spoke on preparedness for the future in addresses before the Rotary club Wednesday. Both are members of the Officers Reserve corps and spoke in connection with the observance of national defense week.

Captain Pound traced the military history of the country from the time of the Revolutionary war to the World war, dwelling particularly on the war of 1812 when Washington was lost to the British and the originals of the constitution and the declaration of independence saved in a gunny-sack by a clerk.

"Other nations did not live up to the treaty of the 1921 disarmament conference," said Captain Pound. "They do not respect obligations but only strength. We cannot have peace without having strength for defense."

Lieutenant Durham replied to editorial questions proposed by a Salem newspaper and cited the national defense act of 1920 as a very reasonable plan for "adequate preparedness." Our standing army he said is only one-half that standard and the national guard one-half and the officers' reserve corps less than half. Increased costs he said are due to the fact that we have not been maintaining a proper defense establishment. The money goes 80 per cent to workingmen and is small in comparison with the billions for relief.

Durham described preparedness as "insurance against war and said in the past we had never been prepared for war. Lack of preparedness, he said, has never kept us out of war.
