Caustic Carries on

When we about a week ago played with the idea of Joey Mack of Albany college being on the outside and Walter Tikit Achia being on the inside, we were just fooling around with an idea suggested by the rare situation of a grappling Chinese football coach. But apparently there is more to the Joey Mack disturbance than we thought.

Thursday of the Albany college camp appeared a queer looking edition of the "Orange Peel," student publication. From every copy issued one corner had been clipped. The corner was that usually devoted to a sports column written by Matt Kramer and appropriately named, "The Orange Peel Corner." The frank discussion of Albany's coaching situation by the columnist was the reason the corner was dark. The censor did his work with scissors but that didn't prevent enterprising students from obtaining originals to find what had provoked the censorship.

The writer summarized the predicament facing Albany col-lego athletic officials by saying, "In spite of all rumors it appears that Joey Mack is in as coach and will remain in that position" and he listed five reasons why Mack cannot be displaced. "The sole possibility for the vacancy is by a resignation by Mack." Which is somewhat more than a gentle hint to Mr. Mack that a resignation would be appreciated. We, viewing things at a distance, fail to see just what Joey Mack has done wrong. He seems to have done the best he could with the material available and, at least, hasn't done any worse than his predecessors.

Congratulations to Don Johnson for having a memory as long as Eddie Cantor's plus Eddie Cantor's mother. Such Meddlesian memories are as invaluable an aid to columnists as they are to radio-comedians. Columnist Upjohn errs, however, in assigning a long gray beard to the phonograph needle. In comparison with a great share of Cantor gags, most of which are coeval with the ark, the Edison, Harrigan & Hart, Upjohn, Cantor, Caustic blackout is a babe in arms.

Lost Mascot Turtle Back On Air Lanes

This is the saga of a desert turtle, a sharp-eyed college dean, and a college dean's granddaughter. A year ago the turtle, famous for his many airplane rides up and down the coast as a mascot in an airplane out of Pendleton, came to Salem in the company of Emelita Erickson, granddaughter of Dean Erickson of Willamette.

Yesterday morning as Erickson was driving to his office, he saw a turtle fighting traffic on South Commercial street. Fearing for the safety of the shell-back, the dean stopped his car and advanced on the little fellow with the intent of carrying it out of the danger zone. As he picked it up, the turtle waved a friendly greeting with neck and tail, and the dean recognized it as the long-lost pet from markings on the shell.

Formal Announcement Out; Joe Louis Wins With Ease Over Lazer

This will be a formality for the commission already has designated Braddock as the No. 1 heavyweight challenger so far as this state is concerned.
