

Special Series Planned, Court Street Church

Preparation is being made at the Court street church of Christ for a special series of Sunday night services. The services will be under the sponsorship of the young peoples' drama group. They met Tuesday night at the church and planned a series of "living pictures" to be portrayed in a novel way from the bible. A special background is being constructed by the men of the church especially for this series.

This series will begin July 1 and will continue through the month of August. These pictures will form the background of the special messages prepared by the pastor, D. W. Daniels.

EXTENDING SCHOOL AGE FAVORED HERE

Economic Changes Call for New System, is Theory of Miss Swanson

Miss Violet T. Swanson, director of the general continuation school, Salem, has recently completed a three months series of half-hour weekly programs over KOAC. Her general subject, "The New Deal for Youth," has dealt with the problems of youth caused by social and economic changes during the past few years with suggestions for solving these problems, and review of national and international surveys regarding the youth movement.

Miss Swanson stressed the importance of the school in keeping up with the times, the need for educational and moral guidance and the importance of well planned recreation in its relation to mental and physical health and leisure time.

Drop-Outs Unfortunate
In her survey, Miss Swanson pointed out how the greatest drop-out of school occur during the 14th and 16th years, or just as soon as the compulsory school age law can be met or evaded. She urges an extension of this law to the age of 16 or 17 in some states. She states it is unwise and unreasonable to permit young people during the dangerous, irresponsible adolescent ages to run away from guidance and care such as school and home should give them at that time. To fully comprehend the horrible plight of these runaways, she urges everyone to read, "Boy and Girl Tramps of America," "Boys and Girls on the March," by Minehan. In the "Parents" magazine for March, 1935, and his "Youth and the Depression" in the Social Studies magazine for March, 1935. She challenges anyone to keep his eyes open as freight trains pass by, on the highways, in criminal records, etc., if they doubt her statements or those of Mr. Minehan.

Her argument for a change in the compulsory school law would be, that added training as well as mental, physical and moral growth would be the result. At the age of 18 young people would be more able to decide what their permanent place in life will be. They may have had specialized or vocational training. Their plan of life would be more settled and the emotional adolescence period would have passed by more easily. Miss Swanson's plan would extend the kindergarten age to eight

Freed by Nazis

Ernst Torgler, leader of the Communist members of the Reichstag at the time Hitler gained supreme power in Reich, has been freed from "protective detention" after two years, but barred from Berlin.

Instead of six, in order to encourage a longer time for natural expression and training such as the kindergarten offers in music, singing, dancing, etc., before inhibiting too soon the natural self of the individual. This would lead to a happier and better adjustment and deeper concentration and participation in the elementary school, she points out.

Junior high school, known as the exploratory period in secondary education, would be better suited to the following ages of 14 to 16 instead of the present age of 12 to 14, she believes, because students would then be more vocationally minded and more ready to comprehend their own interests and to judge their own abilities.

High School VIII 19
Her plan would make the senior high school age include the 17 to 19 age group. This school period is designated in secondary education as the specialization period and Miss Swanson believes it should call for more maturity than the prevailing age of high school students. She points out greater promise of success to the college graduate and those he hopes to serve if his age were more mature at graduation as the natural consequence would be.

In her closing lecture Miss Swanson called attention to the "Division of Youth Service", an agency recently established by the federal office of education which will give constant study to the needs of youth. She believes it will be far reaching because it is national in scope, and under the direction of the United States office of education, and because the government is now keenly aware of youth's problems and is eager to cooperate in solving them.

Within the last few days, recognition and praise were received from the United States commissioner of education for the exceptionally fine work done in the Salem continuation school for youth between the ages of 16 and 24 during the last three year period. He asked for bulletins concerning the work and plan of the school, and for the radio series of talks just completed by Miss Swanson, on "Youth and the New Deal," with permission to use this material in plans being outlined by the division of youth service.

MOST OF DIVIDEND CHECKS UNCLAIMED

The old financial adage when money is available its owners do not want it has proved true during the past week in the disbursement of the second dividend to depositors of the First National Bank in Salem.

More than 4000 checks for depositors were made available a week ago at the bank's offices, Guardian building. In the first seven days only 800 of the checks were called for. The first two days' disbursements amounted to several hundred checks. Later less than 100 checks have been handed out daily.

The second dividend, 10 per cent on the unsecured deposits claims, totalled $75,000. Only 20 per cent of the remaining unsecured deposit claims of the bank have not been paid.

Depositors expect that the bulk of the remaining claims will be paid since the bank still has a sizeable amount of unliquidated notes and uncollected bonds. A 50 per cent assessment on the $200,000 of capital stock of the bank has been levied but its collection has been deferred by the comptroller of the treasury.

Keith Powell is receiver for the bank, which did not resume operations after the bank holiday of March, 1933.
