Exhibit of Paintings at Public Library Viewed

By J. L. S.

An interesting afternoon or evening awaits those who stop in at the public library this week and descend the stairs to the fireplace room. Make it a leisurely visit, for haste in viewing an art exhibit destroys half the pleasure of studying the really fine works that are displayed here.

If you are moody, "The Restless Surf," by J. Stephens Ward and "Windblown," by Anton Piers, will capture your fancy. The former is a turbulent ocean scene and the latter a group of sea-coast trees whipped madly by the wind.

If the day be warm and a glimpse of cool snow especially appealing, pause before Mrs. Per-not Stewart's "Cascades in Winter" and Percy Manser's "Winter". Manser's picture is a study in blues, green and mauve with especially realistic water.

Having been cooled by the winter scenes, proceed in comfort to "Sanctuary" by Maude Wanker. It hangs over the mantel and is one of the largest paintings in the exhibit. The old Carmel mission with its winding paths and mellowed shadows fairly radiates peace. It is a haven for your troubled thoughts.

Perhaps your mood will not be quiescent when you drop in at the exhibit. If so, look up "Clipper Ships" by Rockwell W. Carey. Painted in bold, pirate shades of deep red, blue and greens, the three old clipper vessels crowd together at their moorings. Romance of the open sea surrounds the study. A companion picture by the same artist hangs in the other end of the room.

For intense realism as well as study, "Hay Cocks" by Lillian Bain and the Indian ponies by Quisley are in the front ranks. "Smoke Tree" by H. E. House, the first prize picture of the entire exhibit, carries you back to a desert flat banked in the distance by rugged, barren mountains. Typical desert coloring and plant life give the study a somber cast, but its execution is outstanding.

These are only a few of the paintings to be seen. The Oregon Chapter of the American Artists professional league furnished the pictures and the exhibit is sponsored by the Oregon State Art Museum association, the Salem Arts League and the Salem public library.
