PURVINES REPORT ON THEIR TRAVELS

Drought States Have Heavy Crops Now and Relief Hay Goes Begging

Crops in the Dakotas and other erstwhile drought states, which now are green and lovely, are so plentiful that prices have sagged. Such is the report brought home by Dr. Mary Purvine, who with her husband, Ellis Purvine, and their daughter Helen, has just returned from a seven weeks tour into the east. Accompanying them home from Philadelphia also were Miss Margaret Purvine, who has finished her work at Mills college, and Mrs. Clara Pomeroy, Salem school teacher who had been visiting in the east.

The Purvines' goal was Philadelphia, where their son Ralph was graduated June 7 from Jefferson Medical college. Varying reports of economic conditions were seen and gathered along their route by the local people. At the site of the drought country's publicized "last roundup", in which hundreds of head of cattle were shipped out, they saw tons of hay, said to have been brought in by the government at cost of $24.75 per ton, which officials said they were trying to sell at 10 cents a bale. Some of this hay was actually stacked up to afford shelter for shacks.

The Purvines visited the reconstructed seat of early settlement in Williamsburg, Virginia, and were in Washington, D. C. two days. In Philadelphia Dr. Purvine spent some time studying and working at the Lying-in hospital. She also attended the American Medical association at Atlantic City. The trip home was made by the northern route and included a stop at Glacier National park. Miss Frances Virginia Melton who accompanied them east remained in New York to study music, and Miss Margaret McAlpine, who also went west with them, returned some weeks ago.

Mt. Jefferson, with Jefferson park at its base, where Salem Chemeketans will camp August 11-24, in their seventh annual outing.

Inhalator's Usefulness is Limited, Explains Fireman Who Operates Device Here

Many people are misinformed about the effectiveness of inhalators and pulmometers, now practically obsolete, according to Art White who handles the Salem fire department's life-saving equipment.

White yesterday answered a hurry call to independence where Harold Tilberg was drowned in the Willamette but the boy had been under water for several hours and there was no use in attempting to bring him back to life with the inhalator.

"But they revived that boy at Leslie pool after he had been under five hours," White heard a bystander remark. Harold Johnson, the boy who was revived by the fire department inhalator several weeks ago after he had gone under in Leslie playgrounds a few minutes, White said. "In most cases you're lucky if you can bring them to life if they have been submerged as few as ten minutes," he added.

Time Element Varies — There are numerous factors which determine how long life will remain in a drowning person, including physical condition, temperature of the water and the contents of the stomach. In some cases a patient may be under water for an unusually long time and still be brought to consciousness after several hours of working on him. This is especially true if the patient is unconscious before beginning to drown as in hitting the head on the bottom after diving. When unconscious, the patient does not struggle and water does not fill the lungs and stomach.

The oxygen inhalator, used with artificial respiration, is much more effective than the old pulmotor, White stated. The pulmotor is a mechanical device which pumps air or oxygen in and out of the lungs while the inhalator, Perched high on the crest of the Cascade mountains, the Salem Chemeketans will camp in August in Jefferson park where the altitude is 5800 feet, where there are snowbanks and wild flowers in midsummer. The annual outing will be held in the park August 11-24. It is open not only to members of the Chemeketan organization but to outdoor as well.

Jefferson park is one of the famed alpine spots of America. Its mountain flowers rival those of Mt. Rainier's Paradise valley. Mt. Jefferson rises abruptly from the floor of the park, and the campers plan to explore its cliffs and glaciers. The climb of the mountain will be made August 18.

Bert Cray will again serve as cook for the party. Those who are interested in joining the camp should call members of the committee: Dr. C. A. Downs, Arthur Boesch and C. A. Sprague.

All Quiet in City Office; No Millions

The office of Warren Jones, city recorder and police judge was a quiet place yesterday. "It's all routine now," said the judge who last week completed signing, sealing and checking the city's water bond issue of $1,100,000. "After handling millions we can't be bothered by little things." No little things showed up, however, and as a consequence the file book was bare of even a traffic fine slip.

Jones expressed his gratification that the checking of the bond issue went through without a slip. The maturity dates of the bonds, the signatures of Mayor V. E. Kuhn and of Jones, the city seal, that the coupons were properly numbered and that they corresponded with the bond to which they were attached were the things that had to be scrupulously checked on each bond. It took three people five hours to go through the 1100 bonds and 43,000 interest coupons.
