

Action Pictures Favorites This Week With Some Straight Comedy

ELSINORE OFFERING DOUBLE BILL TODAY

"Men Without Names" Also "Lady Tubbs"; Capitol Has "Calm Yourself"

Fascinating insights into the detective work of Department of Justice men and a tender love story are deftly combined in Paramount's "Men Without Names," which come today to the Elsinore theatre.

Fred MacMurray, Madge Evans, David Holt, the new child prodigy, and Lynne Overman feature the cast of this new film on the exploits of Uncle Sam's detectives. In the film, Fred MacMurray, one of the department's agents, is sent to a small Kansas town to work on a case.

One of the season's most hilarious comedies is the second feature, the Homer Croy story, "Lady Tubbs." Alice Brady plays the title role and Douglass Montgomery and Anita Loos play the featured roles in this rollicking picture, which first depicts Miss Bradley as cook at a railway construction camp in Kansas, later to find her posing as an English noblewoman at a fashionable home on New York's Long Island.

Robert Young, Madge Evans at Capitol

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's uproarious new comedy drama entitled "Calm Yourself," featuring Robert Young and Madge Evans, opens at the Capitol today.

With such popular players as Betty Furness, Ralph Morgan, Nat Pendleton, Hardie Albright, Shirley Ross and others in support of the famous romantic team, "Calm Yourself" is without doubt one of the most entertaining pictures of the year.

It concerns the adventures of Robert Young, a New York advertising man who, when he is fired by his fiancée's father, opens a "confidential service" agency with momentous results. "Confidential services" promises to do any job for its subscribers, no matter how delicate or personal, and its slogan is "Calm Yourself."

When he becomes the professional guardian of a beautiful and wealthy young girl, as well as of a one-year-old heir to a mighty fortune, the fun begins. The girl leads to complications with his fiancée and the baby to complications with the police. The second feature is "No Ransom" with Phillips Holmes.

GRAND THEATRE TO BE CLOSED MONDAY

"Awakening of Jim Burke" Final Picture Before Renovating Begun

Amidst crumpling rock and crashing mountains, Jack Holt, in his starring vehicle for Columbia, "Awakening of Jim Burke," which opened last night at the Grand theatre, delivers another of his powerful portrayals. Cast as a stern construction boss on an engineering project who resents the genteel manners of his 12-year-old son, Holt gets a chance to display the vigorous acting ability that has made him a ranking favorite for the past two decades.

In trying to turn his carefully-nurtured son, a violin prodigy, into a granite chip off the old block, Holt estranges the boy, superbly played by Jimmy Butler, from him. Florence Rice, one of the newer-comers to the screen, again hands in a finely drawn performance, as the girl who sympathizes with the child and finally makes Holt realize that his treatment of him is all wrong. Kathleen Burke, exotic and very talented, does exceptionally well as the "other woman," who tries to keep Holt and his son apart.

The Grand closes Monday for renovating. The opening date will be announced soon in The Statesman.

"Mississippi" With Crosby at State

With a score as good as the best he has ever had in a film, Bing Crosby sings, romps and romances his way through the colorful passages of "Mississippi," Paramount's gala picture now at the State theatre, assisted by W. C. Fields, Joan Bennett, Queenie Smith and Gail Patrick.

"Mississippi" is a story of the romantic south in the days when ladies swooned and men duelled, for entertainment. Crosby, the Yankee sweetheart of Gail Patrick, declines to duel for his lady's love, is branded as a coward and forced to join Fields' acting troupe on "The River Queen" in order to escape the taunts of his former friends.

Fields, the commodore, is a blustering braggart who talks a better fight than he ever saw. Somehow he prevails on Crosby to change his attitude and soon makes him the wildest gunfighter and dueller of the Mississippi, feared all along the river as "The Singing Killer."

One of the best scenes of the film is written about Crosby's singing of the old favorite "Swanee," with the assistance of a 40-voice negro chorus. The other songs done by Crosby are four new Rodgers and Hart tunes, including "Soon" and "Down by the River."

"Carnival" on Today at the Hollywood

Lee Tracy is seen as a fast-talking carnival man, who talks himself in and out of jams. When his wife dies, leaving him with an infant son, he finds himself in a situation. He wants to bring up the child, "Poochy," himself, but the baby's grandparents raise objections. Forcefully, Lee takes the baby from the hospital.

The welfare workers trace him down. But Tracy enters "Poochy" in a baby contest. The kid hasn't a chance in competition with the other babies, but Durante and his dexterous fingers switch votes and "Poochy" is declared winner. The hoax is discovered and they are both sentenced to serve time in jail. The climax is one of the most thrilling scenes the screen has ever shown.

ASKS PLANNERS TO PREPARE PROJECTS

Some Jobs for Present and Others for Future are Urged by Martin

Each county planning board in the state, organizations formed since the last session of the legislature, were requested yesterday by Governor Charles H. Martin to prepare a program of projects needed for county development, some to be constructed under the work relief program and some to be held in abeyance until funds are available in the future. "It is desirable that an early start be made on a study of the resources and needs of your county and its possibilities," the governor wrote the boards. "Almost every county in the state now has a planning board. August Huckestein heads the Marion county group.

The governor's letter continued: State Board Will Assist, is Offer

"The state planning board, which is studying the whole problem of state development, will be glad to cooperate with and advise you as to procedure and methods for starting your activities and will endeavor to coordinate your efforts with those of other planning commissions.

"It is my hope that the unofficial county planning commissions which I have recently appointed will function, not merely as promotional organizations or booster clubs, but will assume the greater responsibility of studying the problems and needs of their county and of determining how its resources may best be conserved and developed. The advisory service which your planning commission can render to federal, state and local public agencies will be valuable to your county and to the state."

all the wild confusion of a land rush. Wagons crash and horses fall to the ground, only to scramble up and continue across the plain—some riderless and some still bearing their owners bent on securing favorable locations in the newly opened territory. The air is filled with shouts and screams, and the entire picture is one of feverish excitement.

This is one of the thrilling scenes of the opening episode of "The Roaring West," the Universal serial which opens an engagement of fifteen weeks at the Elsinore Mickey Mouse matinee Saturday, with stalwart Buck Jones in the starring role. Jones is seen as Montana Larkin, a cowboy heading a party of friends attempting to file on valuable gold claims of which they have learned, and the story deals with the efforts of a rascally outlaw band to secure the property for themselves. As the story progresses from week to week, the conflict increases in intensity, with the embattled cowboys in constant danger of their lives.
