

NEED FOR LARGER CAPITOL STRESSED

Governmental Activities to Increase Says Speaker at Lions Session

"Salem ought to go out and get a fine, adequate capitol because in the next 50 to 75 years the ramifications of government are going to be greatly enlarged," declared Sheldon F. Sackett, managing editor of The Statesman, in addressing Salem Lions club yesterday noon and outlining what he feels are "six fundamental fallacies of the present time."

"It is an absolute fallacy to say we need less government," Sackett asserted. "We need sane, good government, but growth of business requires increasingly more regulation." From this point he led to the need of planning a capitol building adequate for future expansion.

The first fallacy the speaker professed to see is the belief that "the machine threatens to bring social and political revolution." While the machine age may bring perils, "it should also open new vistas to civilized man," Sackett declared. "People must spend more, use more."

Fallacies Assailed

As a second fallacy, "the view in at least many people's minds of the sanctity of our constitution" was listed. "I am for constitutional government but because Europe has unconstitutional governments, that is no reason our constitution should go unchanged," the speaker said.

Demands for less government was given as the third fallacy and nationalism as the fourth. "Any time there's danger of war breaking out, don't fool yourself," Sackett advised. "Your nation is going to be involved. I think it is a tragic mistake that the United States doesn't participate in the world court."

Hopes for peace without disarmament are futile and fears that the destruction of civilization impedes are not well grounded, Sackett concluded.

SALEM 4-H CLUBS' WORK WINS HONOR

National Recognition of a Salem Project was Accorded This Week by the American Lumberman, Magazine Published in Chicago, which bore on its cover an illustration of some of the miniature farm structures built to scale by the 4-H Builders' clubs and exhibited in Salem at the Housing show this summer.

Two weeks' scholarship this summer at Corvallis through the efforts of the local club.

The Kiwanis committee in charge of the boy building project is headed by L. H. Van Winkle and includes Dean George Alden, W. J. Braund and Dr. W. J. Thompson. Since the Kiwanis motto is "We build," the project is regarded by members as particularly suitable.

The boys enrolled in the 4-H clubs build miniature farm structures of all kinds to exact scale. They will display their models at the state fair this fall.

Officials Accept Orford Invitation

Governor Martin and other state officials have accepted an invitation to spend Labor day at Port Orford.

Secretary of State Seal and State Treasurer Holman said they probably would make the trip.

Members of the state planning board have been asked to study the recreational resources of the Port Orford district.

At the board of directors' meeting this week, the Kiwanis club voted to offer as a prize at the state fair this fall a scholarship at Oregon State college for the best 4-H builder. Lester Martin of Hayesville enjoyed a similar

FUTURE FARMERS MEETING IS HELD

The August meeting of the Salem chapter Future Farmers of America was held at the home of R. L. Morgan with a large attendance.

Discussions and plans were made for the many activities for the remainder of the summer. Outstanding among these is the radio program to be given over KOAC Saturday evening, August 10, 7 to 7:30. The group will enter a Future Farmer and Dad Livestock judging team at the State fair, composed of three dads and three Future Farmers who will judge five classes of livestock in competition with other chapters in the state.

Boys will enter cows in the F. F. A. butterfat cost contest and a pen of chickens in the F. F. A. egg feed cost contest. Although the farm shop, a part of the vocational agricultural course, has not been installed in the Salem high school yet, some of the boys have been doing some home work and will enter their work in the farm shop exhibit.

Harold Bressler is fitting his purebred Romney sheep to enter in the open classes. Earl Lyons will make entries in the poultry exhibits. Other boys are planning on entering the open classes with their home projects.

The chapter has entered into a contract with the state fair board for a concession to sell ice cream and candy as a means to raise funds to help carry on their various chapter activities during the coming school year.
