

Oregon to Get Many Settlers

Reclamation Development Stressed by Senator Duncan in Talk

Never in history of Oregon has there been such opportunity to gain desirable settlers for the state as there is today, Senator Robert M. Duncan of Ontario told the Salem chamber of commerce yesterday noon, and declared that in Ontario a strong effort is being made to get all the desirable residents possible. Duncan represents the counties of Malheur, Harney and Grant or about one-fourth of the area of the state.

The senator, a former Salem resident, outlined the progress made in reclamation development in his area since the movement was first started in 1904, and stressed the Owyhee irrigation project and what it means to Oregon. Malheur and Harney counties now have 1800 farms of from 40 to 80 acres. Duncan represents the project will bring in 2300 new farm units, all to be settled. Water developments for 55,000 acres of land will be available for the crops in 1936, he said, and the following year the project will be completed. When the reclamation project is done, 74,000 acres of virgin land will be brought in.

Increase Products

The program, when completed, will boost the present 12,000 carloads of produce annually from Malheur county to 16,000 carloads of produce and livestock, he said.

Duncan deplored the legislature's short sightedness in abolishing the state school of mines in recent years, and declared that he hoped to see something done for mineral development of the state as soon as the time comes that the state budget can stand the expense.

Timber development in Oregon is going ahead in a logical and scientific manner in the next two years, he stated, and this coupled with the range control program now on the way he feels, which mean much to future development of Oregon.

Frauds Grazing Act

He explained briefly the Taylor grazing act by which the public domain will be withdrawn ultimately from entry and predicted that protection of grazing lands through this measure will mean much to the livestock and especially the cattle industry.

Duncan predicted Oregon will within a few years have a population three times its present size if the people of the Willamette valley do their part as this eastern Oregon section has done its.

Many Granges Vote For Retention of Old Site

Twenty-three grange districts, which held meetings last week, have sent to Morton Tompkins, member of the grange legislative committee, resolutions urging the present site for the new state capitol building.

Other grange meetings were scheduled for early this week, Tompkins declared.

Under the Dome

Occurrences of Gossip in Oregon's State Government

What a shock to the builders of the state office building, was the revelation yesterday that the building had not been designed to carry additional stories. It has always been the general understanding that when the state needed more office space it could add onto the new building.

Walter Norblad has twice asserted from the floor of the house that under no circumstances would he vote for any bill that did not come within the purview of the capitol question or social security legislation. His stand does not seem to be taken seriously by the rest of the members as they are starting on a bill passing spree.

After an adjourned session at Multnomah stadium Saturday the legislators were all back in their seats yesterday trying to solve the problems presented to them. Their problem is just about as tough as the Washington State team was for Oregon State Saturday.

Looking on at the session yesterday was Arthur Benson, clerk of the supreme court.

Well, well! The legislators discovered that they had too many clerks and let ten go. It's too bad for the boys and girls but after all, there is a limit, even in politics.

An attractive display of wood carvings has been set up in the committee room to the right of the senate chamber. Art Clough of Eugene has them there to show the legislators what can be done towards decorating the rotunda of the new capitol with Oregon wood carvings.

Between sessions the two houses sometimes take on the atmosphere of a ladies' social gathering when the wives of the legislators and clerks get together to talk over this and that.

Morton Tompkins, acting chairman of the Oregon grange legislative committee, is one of the most active lobbyists at the session.

What has become of the Holy Joes? They seem to have faded to extinction. The only claim they have so far to distinction was the tardiness of two of their members, which resulted in the election of Latourette for speaker. It must have been a good show.

Some of the legislators are almost bound to demand proper ventilation in the new state capitol. It is mighty hard for some of them to keep awake in the poorly ventilated rooms now being used which soon become stuffy and smoky after a few minutes of a committee meeting.

2 Appropriation Bills Considered

Two bills carrying appropriations were discussed by the joint ways and means committee Monday but no definite action was taken.

One bill authorized an appropriation of $15,000 for a new administration building, water supply and repairs at the state fair plant.

The other called for an appropriation of $18,000 for the establishment of a range livestock experimental station near Burns. The money would be used for the purchase of cattle and sheep. This is a cooperative project.

Further hearings will be held before either bill is reported out.

The state emergency board previously granted an appropriation of $8000 for the state fair plant, but this later was held illegal.

Mrs. Lucy Brown Is Called Beyond

STAYTON, Oct. 28.—Mrs. Lucy Eliza Brown, 64, died at her home here Monday afternoon, following a brief illness. Mrs. Brown was born in Fox Valley, Linn county, November 19, 1870, and had spent all her life in Oregon.

Her parents crossed the plains in 1852, and were among the early pioneers of the Santiam valley.

Other than counties, municipalities and school districts.

Change in Milk Control Law is Sought by Burke

Senator Burke introduced a bill Monday which would remove the grade A milk producer-distributor from the pooling provision of the state milk control law. Burke declared that this feature of the milk control act was unfair and might result in invalidating the entire law.
