Dr. Spaeth Talks At Waller Hall On Friday

DR. SIGMUND SPAETH, renowned critic and lecturer. will address a Salem audience under the auspices of the Willamette university school of music Friday night in Waller hall starting at 8 o'clock.

Contrary to rumors that the house is sold out, there are still available tickets for the lecture which may be obtained at Wills' Music store.

Dr. Spaeth was a guest artist over a national net-work radio program the past week and was heard by many Salem listeners. W. J. Henderson said of him in the New York Sun, "With merry quip and pointed jest, he has punctured many shams, satirized pretensions and shed the beneficent light of his genial nature on some of the desirable qualities of tonal art.'

During the past season, Sigmund Spaeth has reached new heights of popularity and success on the lecture platform. He has been consistently effective with every type of audience, including a command performance at the White House, where the president insisted upon a return engage-

What may prove the salvation of grand opera in the "sticks" is a plan first put into effect by the Cleveland symphony under direction of Arturo Rodzinsky. In 1933 the Cleveland symphony sponsored its first opera, presented by a cast of local singers supplemented by guest stars in the leading roles. The success of this effort resulted in the presentation of a series of six operas last year. The 1935 season, which opened with Greta Stueckgold and Lotte Lehman in "Der Rosenkavalier", comprises four operas. Detroit and Cincingati symphony orchestras have put the plan into effect with success and other cities are contemplating similar programs since the Metropolitan has confined its season in late years to New York.
