More Pensioners On County's Lists

Old-age pensions have been granted to about 25 more persons in Marion county during 1935, the total number now receiving county aid being nearly 600, according to county court records. County officials say the number of applicants for pensions have diminished slightly the last 60 days since many of the older people believe larger pensions will be forthcoming shortly under the state-federal acts and believe an application now might prejudice their receipt of a larger amount. No prejudice would operate against any present recipient of a pension should an additional benefit be conferred by the state and federal governments, officials say. No pensions are granted except upon thorough investigation. They are then only granted to persons more than 70 years old, who can prove need, and who have been a resident of the state 15 years and of Marion county for two years.
