Job Insurance Tax Due Soon

Payment Slated in April For First 3 Months; Compile Records

Employers in Oregon will be asked to pay their first unemployment insurance fund taxes in April for the three month's period preceding that month. Thereafter the tax reports will be made monthly, it was learned yesterday at the offices of the state unemployment compensation commission here.

T. Morris Dunne, one of the three commissioners charged with enforcement of the act, said employers were responding excellently to the request of the commission for assistance in making plans for collection of the tax. Dunne and other members of the commission have been meeting with groups of employers and discussing with them the particular problems of each industry as regards the tax. Employers at the outset will register with the commission and will receive a notice from the commission, to be posted in his establishment, showing that he is registered under the state unemployment act. This notice must be posted in all businesses where four or more employes are en gaged.

Keep Records Now While no benefits will be paid until January 1, 1938; the commission will begin at once to compile data from employers regarding the time a man ends his employment with a firm. This data will be kept as a basis for determining future benefints. Bacteria Count Slightly Higher Last 6 Months But Not Alarming

Bacterial count of milk sold in Salem during the last six months' grading period increased slightly over that of the previous period, which ended July 15, 1935, but continued far below the maximum provided by city ordinance, John L. Geren, county dairy and food inspector, announced yesterday.

Whereas the city milk code allows a maximum of 30,000 bacteria per cubic centimeter, pasteurized milk here averaged but 7400 and raw milk only 11,500 during the grading period which ended last Wednesday, Geren pointed out. The increase, he said, probably was due to the fact that this grading period included the hot weather months. The number of milk distribu-

Progress on Two Santiam Roads Is Outlined in Talk by Baldock

Oregon's greatest assets - its salubrious climate and its scenic attractions-will be best shown to the people of the nation through the state's road system, R. H. Baldock, state highway engineer, told the Salem chamber of commerce Monday noon. "The roads of the future must be dustless, they must be smooth and safe,' Baldock declared. Baldock said the state had led out among commonwealths of the nation in getting its current road construction program under way. As a result a $10,000,000 construction program will all be progressing by April 2—all the projects being let within the last six months. Baldock said a large amount of preliminary work preceded the awarding of contracts. All quantities of materials to be used have to be figured, all plans have to be made in detail and rights of way must either be acquired or condemnation proceedings must be started in the courts. Overhead Reduced

The state has reduced its contingency costs greatly in the last decade in building roads, the speaker said. In the period 1924-1932, on the average, 171/2 per cent was added to each contract for engineering fees and for contingencies. In 1933 the state cut this sum to eight and one-half per cent; in 1934 it was reduced to four and one-half per cent. Careful planning to eliminate contingecy costs brought this reduction, Baldock said.

Mr. Baldock outlined briefly the status of roads tributary to the Salem area. He said federal forest money totalling $770,000 had already been spent on the North Santiam road with $100,-000 allotted for this year. A threemile gap in the road will be closed with the new appropriation. The road will then be opened with a hard-surface available north of the junction with the South San- location work here.
