

To Honor Lane On Wednesday

Only Western Senator to Vote Against War Is Now Acclaimed

The memory of Senator Harry Lane, graduate of Willamette Medical school in 1878, who was one of six senators to vote against America's entrance into the World war, will be honored by Willamette university at a special outdoor program Wednesday, April 22, on the college campus.

The exercises, at 11:15 a. m., will be in charge of the university International club of which Laurence Burdette is president. Nina Lane Faubion, daughter of Senator Lane, will speak of her recollection of her noted father. As a memorial to Senator Lane, a Sequoia tree will be planted between Easton and Waller halls.

Frederick J. Libby, executive secretary of the National Council for Prevention of War, will be the principal speaker on the program, a feature of peace week. Dr. Thomas Acheson, pastor of Centenary-Wilbur church, Portland, former pastor of Jason Lee church, Salem, will be another speaker. Student body presidents from Linfield, University of Oregon and Reed college will take part in the program.

The other senators who voted against America's participation in the war were Senator J. Gronna, of North Dakota; Senator Robert M. La Follette, Sr., of Wisconsin; Senator George W. Norris, of Nebraska; Senator William J. Stone, of Missouri and Senator James K. Vardaman, of Mississippi. Senator Lane's appearance on the senate floor at that time has been recalled as a dramatic event in American legislative history.

The significance of Senator Lane's answer to the senior senator of Oregon who asked him why he refused to vote for the declaration of war is better appreciated today because his words have come true. Senator Lane said: "I cannot vote to throw our country into a struggle, the final results of which no one is able to foretell. This is not a war to make the world safe for greed and profits. After this war there will be less democracy than ever before."

Not 24 hours after these words were uttered, the entire nation was pillorying Senator Lane. The press branded him as a twentieth-century Benedict Arnold. The Richmond, Va., Times-Dispatch added his name on the "Senate Roll of Dishonor." He was burnt in effigy throughout the entire country. His mail brought threats of physical violence.

What was perhaps the hardest thing for the senator to endure was the censure of his closest friends. Charles S. Barnett, an influential man from Lane's own state wrote him a public letter in which he said, "You will render Oregon a great and lasting service by resigning in favor of an able representative." Being the only senator west of the Rockies who sided with the dissenters, the entire Pacific coast united in humiliating him before the world.

So terribly did the abuse and condemnation affect Senator Lane that he knew he was going to die. Before leaving Washington, where the war measure had just passed, he told two of his closest friends, Senator La Follette of Wisconsin and Senator Norris of Nebraska, that he would never see them again—and he never did. While enroute to Oregon Senator Lane died in San Francisco.

The years have changed public sentiment toward Senator Lane. Senator Hiram Johnson of California, who voted for America's entrance into the World war, said, "This is a delightful time now to find justification of the men who stood firmly years ago for maintaining American security and keeping out of every foreign entanglement and every European war."

Nineteen years after his death, the house and senate show their approval of his policy by passing the neutrality measure, which he advocated. The control of armament manufacturers, approved by Lane, is now universally accepted. A ban against American ships carrying war material to any belligerent country, a measure advocated by Lane, is now regarded as quite proper.

Senator Asle J. Gronna of North Dakota, paid a short but beautiful tribute to Lane. He said, "No man will be able to preach a eulogy such as the deeds of Harry Lane deserve."

Senator Norris of Nebraska said over Lane's grave, "When he was denounced by men in public life whom he loved, as an enemy to his country, it well nigh broke his heart. . . The despair of his honest heart was so great and the agony of his blighted hope so severe that he never recovered his former self. . . I think he was satisfied with his life work. . . The place where he lies is almost sacred in the true hearts of the many thousands who knew his work and loved him for it."

Libby Is Speaker Tonight on Peace

"The Threat of War and What You Can Do About It" will be the subject tonight for an address at the First Methodist church by Frederick J. Libby, executive secretary of the National Council for Prevention of War. He will begin his talk at 7:30 o'clock. Dr. Libby has attained national distinction in his work for peace. His visits to Salem are made annually. The goal of his organization is to prevent war. If conflict breaks out in Europe, his organization will urge non-participation policies by the United States. Wednesday morning he will be the principal speaker at a memorial service to be held at Willamette university for the late Senator Harry Lane.

Sale of Tickets Over Telephone Opposed by Business Men's League

Inquiries to the Business Men's League yesterday elicited information that the League is absolutely opposed to selling tickets by telephone, the report being made that this sales method was being practiced in the city. Officers of the league urged members not to buy tickets offered through such solicitation.

Debate on Party Merits Arranged

W. L. Goslin, secretary to Governor Martin, and Monroe Sweetland, Willamette law student, will debate on the topic, "Which Way for Oregon Progressives, the Democratic Party or a Third Party," at the labor hall next Tuesday night, April 22. Goslin has long been active in affairs of the Young Democrats, and Sweetland, temporary secretary of the newly established farmer-labor association, has had considerable experience in working with liberal political groups, and labor organizations, both on the Pacific coast and in the south and east.
