Reclamation Fund Bill for 58 Millions Rejected by House

Three Oregon Projects Hit

Future Uncertain; Second Chance For Approval in Conference Is Seen

WASHINGTON, May 20.—(AP)—Uncertainty clouded the future of the vast western reclamation program today as the house rejected senate plans to appropriate $58,000,000 for 1937 construction.

The house rejected also senate proposals for a $3,710,500 system or irrigation projects on Indian reservations, involving 41 projects in 13 western states.

Another chance for agreement between the two legislative houses remains, however, since today's action sent the interior department supply bill, in which the appropriations were proposed, back to a conference of house and senate managers.

Senator Hayden (D.-Ariz.) chairman of the senate managers, said he believed agreement would be reached at the next conference.

Reclamation opponents styled the $58,000,000 program a "gigantic pork barrel thrust out of western skies," while the entire western bloc described the program one of rehabilitation which would not add to agricultural surpluses and which would insure the agricultural future of the west.

The principal appropriations refused by the house were $20,000,000 for the Grand Coulee dam in Washington, $16,000,000 for the Central Valley California project, and $4,000,000 for the Casper-Alcova reclamation system in Wyoming.

Owyhee, Deschutes Projects on List

Among other projects were Boise, Idaho, Payette division, $1,800,000; Boise, drainage, $160,000; Deschutes, Ore., $450,000; Owyhee, Ore., $400,000; Columbia basin Washington, economic surveys and investigations, $25,000; Yakima, Wash., Roza division, $2,500,000; Shoshone, Wyo., Heart mountain division, $1,000,000.

Other projects which have not been given legal existence by act of congress and construction of which the senate proposed to authorize were:

Those projects, with the exception of the Grand Lake project in Colorado, already under construction with emergency funds allotted under authority of the president. The Grand Lake project had not been fully surveyed.
