W.U. Student From Hawaii Tells of Conditions; Dexter Talks Too

Islands of the acific were described by a trio of speakers at the Rotary club yesterday. First was Miss Kuulei Emoto, native of Hawail, of Japanese racial origin, who is an exchange student from the University of Hawaii at Honolulu. Miss Emoto emphasized the fact that Hawaii is an integral part of the United States and proud of it; that while populations there are mixed they are loyal to Hawaii and to this country and not to the countries of their racial origin. Old oriental customs which still prevail will be dropped by the younger generation when the older passes on, she predicted.

First settlers in Hawaii were Tahitians who came in crude vessels 800 years ago. The next stage was 200 years ago when Capt. Cook discovered the islands. The recent phase of Hawaiian history was annexation by the United States about 40 years ago. Sugar culture made necessary the importation of labor, Labor conditions have greatly improved on the dslands; and races live together harmoniously. McGilchrist Talks of living in the hilippines for a third of a century, I. B. Baxter, club member and now Salem resident, told of the transformation of the islands under American rule. When he went there in 1902 it was cholera ridden; bandits inhabited the mountainous part of the island of Cebu; and general conditions were bad. He was there during the time the insular government was set up and schools established. Now English is the common speech, replacing the 52 dialects of the islands and Spanish, although these are still

"Every American may be proud of the work of the American government in the Philippines. It took a primitive people without a common language and trained them for stable government," said Dexter.

He also paid a tribute to President Quezon and Vice-President Osmania as statesmen, able in any country. The people, he said, really did not want independence. but it was more or less thrust on the warmest of any lake in the them by American interests who opposed Filipine competition.
