Textile Strike Ended, France

But Social Party Creating More Trouble for Blum; Charges Are Hurlled

PARIS, Sept. 17.—(AP)—The Lille textile strike, largest of a widespread wave, was settled tonight after laborious negotiations in which Socialist Premier Leon Blum acted as peacemaker.

Quickly, however, another threat to France's political peace made its appearance—new activity by the militant "French social party," successor to the Croix De Feu disbanded by government decree.

The Lille agreement gave 35,000 workers a six per cent increase in wages and allowed employers authority over factory delegates named by workers to represent them in collective bargaining.

An end to the Lille strike issue lessened concern of the popular front government over occupation of factories and mills throughout much of France.

But the new threat spread fear of possible political fighting between rightists and leftists.

Col. Francois de La Rocque's followers in the "French social party" placarded the city with gigantic posters charging "the popular front has deceived!"

Squads of leftists, some of them shouting "La Rocque to the scaffold!" roamed the streets trying to rip down the posters.

Police, fearing violence, were stationed wherever one of the signs appeared. They found La Rocque guards also on the watch and had instructions to call for reinforcements if needed.

Settlement of the Lille dispute left numerous other strikes in industrial sections and the movement continued to spread. Metal workers in the Douai and Vitry-Le-Francois regions, both highly industrialized centers, and textile workers at Epinal remained idle. Small, scattered strikes persisted.

Formal signing of the Lille agreement, which represented concessions by both sides, was expected quickly and it was believed the strikers would evacuate the mills by Saturday morning.

In addition to the immediate wage increase, the employers agreed to a second wage adjustment next November and to a new scale for lowest-paid employees retroactive from August 1, in some cases from July 1.

Strikers and non-strikers battled at Thion on the intervention of a leftist deputy in the textile strike in the Vosge district.

Friends of Mrs. Charles Wilson will be interested to learn that she will take up her duties as house mother at Alpha Phi Alpha sorority next week.

Who is Moviedom's Best Dressed Woman?

Four prominent film stars loom as contenders for the title of Hollywood's "best dressed woman," following selection of candidates by three of the film colony's modistes. At present there is no title holder. The leading contenders (so the modistes say) are Gladys Swarthout, Carole Lombard, and Joan Crawford, shown above with Kay Francis, who held the crown for several years. However, each of the modistes submitted the names of several actresses who may be considered when the final choice is made. Among them are such favorites as Jeannette MacDonald, Ruby Keeler, Mary Livingston, Glenda Farrell, Dolores Del Rio, and Madge Evans.

Friends of China To 'Try' Hirohito

Roger Baldwin of the American civil liberties union was designated as "magistrate" and the principal witnesses listed for the prosecution were General Fang Chen Wu, who harried the Japanese in north China in 1933, and Miss Wu-Kau Liu, daughter of a leader of the Kuo Min Tang party, who arrived in this country two days ago.
