"Sweepstakes on Love"

By MAY CHRISTIE

"please add at least four years of common sense!"

"Who wants common sense on a night like this?" He drew a long breath. "Magnificent, isn't it?"

"Like Spring, Roger."

"And you're like Spring in that little girl dress. You've had a new idea—don't fill it suddenly hit me as I saw you sitting in the conservatory a few minutes ago—that you're so awfully pretty! Now call me a blind fool, will you?"

"The moonlight's blinding you, Roger. You know darned well I'm no beauty! Then she added, recklessly, because she was so thrillingly happy she simply couldn't weigh her words: "Regina's a whole lot better-looking than I am."

"Now isn't that just like a woman?"

"What is?" She was conscious of a change in his voice. What an idiot she had been to challenge him!

"Comparisons, my dear." He saw her face fall. He was not obtuse. He said: "Let's forget everybody else, and talk about ourselves, Diana. What night is your coming-out dance to be? What are your plans? I'm booked for Hot Springs for a week of polo the end of this month, and Thanksgiving week I've promised to be in South Carolina for duck shooting, so I hope your party isn't going to fall then or thereabouts?"

"Mother and I haven't fixed on a date yet," said Diana in a very small voice.

Would there be a date? How on earth could they afford it? Had Roger no idea of their situation?

Why! the very taxes on the Darlington home on East 68th street had not been paid in the last three years, and the mortgage amounted to at least twenty thousand dollars.

This very dress she wore had not been paid for. She had only learned that yesterday when Genevieve's modiste had come round to the house and demanded at least part of her bill. Genevieve was clever at staving such things off, but even with her cleverness there must be a day of reckoning.

But in this enchanted moment, but those thoughts behind her! Make headway with Roger! (To Be Continued)

High Tide Mark Near, Heavy Storms Probable

TILLAMOOK, Ore., Nov. 19.—(AP)—The Pacific surged toward its yearly high mark today while observers scanned weather charts to ascertain whether the high tides will be accompanied by the usual heavy storms, the 1936 seasonal high mark, 9.7 feet, is scheduled at 12:26 p. m. Saturday, Nov. 28.
