

Report Is Given, Lamb Prospects

Market Feeding Probably Larger Than Year Ago, Thought

Prospects for the lamb market for 1936-37 are not greatly different from those of the 1935-36 season according to a report of the division of crops and livestock estimates of the United States department of agriculture. Although no definite figure of the number of lambs being fed for the market is available, indications are that it will be larger than a year ago. However, the effect of the increased slaughter of lambs upon prices should be offset, at least in part, by increased consumer demand, according to the bureau.

The lamb crop was nine per cent larger in 1936 than in 1935. Although the effects of the 1935 drought on total supply of feed grains in the country as a whole was almost as serious as those caused by the 1934 drought the sheep industry will be much less affected this year than in 1934. This year, only a small part of the western sheep region was included in the drought area. It seems probable, however, that further expansion in the western sheep industry will be prevented, and perhaps some decrease will occur as a result of the grazing-control measures for the public domain which are being put in effect under the Taylor Act.

The number of sheep in the native sheep states has increased moderately in recent years, and further increases may occur in the next few years if the Soil Conservation program causes a substantial and permanent shift of acreage from grain to pasture and hay. But any probable increases in sheep numbers occurring in the native sheep states will hardly be large enough to offset the probable decreases in the western sheep states.

Although lamb prices will be strengthened somewhat in the next few years by the small total supplies of livestock for slaughter, they will probably be affected much less than prices of hogs and cattle. But as cattle and hog slaughter increases at the end of several years, the effect of this increase in supplies upon cattle and hog prices also will be much greater than the effect on lamb prices. On the whole, from the standpoint of lamb prices, it appears that the situation of the sheep industry in the next five or six years will compare favorably with the situation for other species of meat animals.
