Loganberry Growers Favor Continuing Control Another Year

Hear Warning | Salem Markets On Surpluses

Annual Meets to Be Held in Five Districts December 12

Approximately 100 loganberry growers from all producing centers in Oregon, meeting here all day yesterday at the chamber of commerce, voted unanimously to carry on the Oregon Loganberry Control Board, Inc., for another year. At the same time, time and places were set for the annual meetings in each district for election of members to the board of directors. For the first time in all the loganberry discussions which have been held here the past few years, a note of warning to keep the price from going too high was sounded at yesterday's session. This was suggested as one means to saving the logan industry from over production, as happened in the hop industry, for instance.

No action was taken on this matter, and there was some division of sentiment on controlling over-production. Some feeling was also evident that other small fruits should be brought under a control

The past year, the control board brought the industry through to a 4 cent price on logans, the highest in years. Approximately 90 per cent of the berries in the state, including cooperative memberships, came under the board's jurisdic-

Frank Hrubetz of Liberty, president of the control board of directors, presided at the meeting yesterday. Arden A. Reed of the state department of agriculture explained the grades and grading set up for the industry and Senator E. A. McCornack of Eugene spoke, favoring the control movement. William Linfoot, attorney for the board, gave a report of the past year's activities.

Among problems which were brought before the meeting was the influence of the Washington law which prohibits wineries in that state from purchasing logans, or other fruit, from outside Washington for use in making wine. However, no action was attempted in the matter.

Growers seemed to feel generally that grades and grading should more uniform over the state, both in benefit to the grower and
