Louisville Disaster Leaves 200,000 Homeless

Deprived of heat, power and light by the raging waters of the Ohio river, more than 200,000 homeless citizens of Louisville faced disaster in near-panic as they fought to save their lives and possessions. This aerial view is of hydro-electric power plant at the government dam off the main section of the city as the water topped by several feet the highest water ever recorded.

open windows. Trembling with the ecstasy of a strange, uncharted feeling she had never known before, Elizabeth had been wildly happy.

Now—this anti-climax! Her step-father rose, went to the door, and put on his hat. "Remember what I've said, Elizabeth," he turned sharply. The words came like little explosives, cracking the silence that lay between them. "There's to be no going out with this Gerald Bruton. There's never been a scandal in our family. Apart from other considerations, I owe it to your dead mother to see there never will be one!"

In desperate impatience, Elizabeth waited for the telephone to ring. Gerald had promised to call her between three and four to make arrangements for the evening. The hands of the grand old clock pointed to ten minutes past four. At any moment Colonel McCarthy might return. Probably with renewed antagonism, because of his scolding, due to a dampness in the air today and because of the gulf that divided 57 from 19.

Jealous of youth! Wanting his own life over again! Hating the feast of years and happiness that stretched before her!

So thought Elizabeth, who had studied books of psychology in college, and found them illuminating, though depressing.

The bitterly resented the Colonel's criticism. He was a peppy and unreasonable martinet, she thought. Surely he must have made her mother most unhappy in the few years they had been together. She wouldn't let him spoil her life. She was resolved on that.

The telephone tinkled. It was

Mrs. Fred Yost Passes

Away at Residence in Victor Point Community

VICTOR POINT, Jan. 27—Mrs. Fred Yost, who had made her home here for more than 25 years died at her home Sunday night after a brief heart attack. Although in failing health Mrs. Yost had been as well as usual and had been visiting a daughter in Portland, returning home Sunday.

She would go in by bus. Nothing her step-father could say or do would stop her.
