Smell of goat believed cure

Feather duster tickling barred

Hot weather causes strange notes

Animals must have tall tails

Snakes swim with tails out of water

That truth is stranger than fiction is most evident when one thumbs through the world almanac and discovers some of the odd facts which that volume contains. For instance—Mexican Indians suffering from tuberculosis tie a goat to their bed, believing the smell will drive away the germs; one of the local laws of Portland, Me., makes it illegal to tickle a girl beneath her chin with a feather duster; one pound of glass can be spun so fine that it will make a thread 25,000 miles long; and at Buenos, O., an odd law makes it compulsory for all animals on the streets after sundown to have a tall tail!

Veils Add Chic Touch to New Spring Hats

Advance showings of new spring hats indicate this year's styles will be gayly modernistic. Flowers and graceful veils are popular in the new models. The "peach basket" hat is made of natural woven Milan straw, with a cluster of red carnations on the front giving lovely color. The "Homburg variation" is a modern tribute to the "horseless carriage" days. "Bicycle sailor" hats, chic and attractive, are infinite in their variety this season, judging from present showings.

There were three murderers, a bank robber, a jewel thief and three habitual criminals. All had been condemned to spend life terms in the Cayenne colony, which includes the notorious "Devil's Island."
