Shakespeare Play Offered by Little Theatre of W. U. at Waller

"Twelfth Night" sponsored by the Little Theatre Guild of Willamette university will be presented in Waller hall Friday and Saturday nights of this week.

Those who will see the play will meet Sir Toby, Lord Toby, the frolicsome old toper, with his plentiful wit but denuded purse; Sir Andrew Aguecheek, Norrilli Cray, his butt and foil, on whose dull but aspiring brain Sir Toby plays for money; the Duke, Leonard Schmurr, a fine fellow but in love with love at first; Olivia, Melba Rionelle, the heiress, with calm, cultured bearing, who loses her self-possession in love's presence, and among others Viola, Jose Acklin, the chief character, one of Shakespeare's most appealing women.

All seats will be reserved and may be had at first, Thursday at Oulsenberry's. Students may receive tickets Friday at Eston hall. Mrs. Chester Oppen is directing the play. Rehearsals have been held continually for the past three months. Miss Lois Latmer, head of the home economics department, is in charge of the costumes, and Miss Constance Fowler and the art classes are arranging the scenery.

Ushers for the play will be Miss Arisa Jones, Miss Charlotte Litchfield, Miss Beverly Brom and Miss Inelle Chapin. Wilmer Willis is stage manager assisted by David Stall. Edwin Minneman is general manager.

Initiations Upon Campus Displeas

Student members of the Willamette university inter-fraternity council received a mild rebuke Tuesday night when faculty advisors of the council commented upon the trend, as revealed by the recent fraternity initiations, to "move initiation back on the campus."

A few years ago the faculty was almost unanimously in favor of drastic action against fraternities as the result of unpleasant situations which annually arose from fraternity initiations carried on partially upon the campus.

The situation seemed remedied until indications of a "return to the campus" appeared recently, they said.

Faculty members of the inter-fraternity group include Dr. R. M. Gatke, Prof. W. C. Jones and Dr. D. H. Schulze.

Fraternity officers are ex-officio members of the council.

Sage of Salem Speculates

By D. H. TALMADGE

More Noise Ah, Mister Post, you have put the axe to noise right at its root; The trying noises people make, Machinery sounds to stomach ache, In their results do sadly irk, Compared with nature's silent work.

The noise that oftentimes annoys The ones who are annoyed by noise Is trifling, fussy, uncalled for, And rates low in life's vital score, While force unheard in men and things The most of earthly blessings brings.

Force which prevails, but does not haste, Force which has never backward faced, Force which avails to hunger feed, And chatters not, but does the deed— Ah, yes, but don't you think 'twere well That you admit some noise is swell?

"J. A. B. Sunday" again! And not a word as yet to deny or More Road Funds Likely Available

New Federal Policy Eyed by State Commission; to Inform Courts

PORTLAND, Ore., March 10.—(AP)—The probability that an additional $750,000 will be spent on 4100 miles of Oregon roads came to light today when the state highway commission discussed provisions of the federal government's new highway policy.

R. H. Baldock, state highway engineer, said the new program for a state secondary highway system was similar to the federal system of primary roads established 20 years ago. Of the 4100 miles to be affected, half would be chosen from the existing state secondary routes and the other half from county roads.

The commission said details of the plan, under which the state would pay $300,000 and the bureau of public roads the remainder, would be mailed to county courts soon.

Already Assisting Baldock said the bureau of public roads already is cooperating with the state highway department in a general highway survey.

The state highway commission today also went on record opposing the use of sand and gravel from Oregon beaches for road work and approved an increased load limit from 6 to 10 tons for the Willamette river bridge near Gresham, Lane county.

The commission took occasion to thank the legislature for heeding the recommendation that no more highway money be diverted for other purposes.

A story comes of a convict in an eastern prison who studied law and became so good at it that he got himself out of a writ of habeas corpus. The story, which is perhaps exaggerated, seems to prove something or other.

People, it seems, never weary of asking the question, "What would you do first if you came into a million dollars?" An eastern magazine is the latest to ask the question. The answer is obvious—we'd pay our income tax.

According to an evangelist, who has published the list, there are upwards of 700 sins to which humanity is liable. I presume there is some demand for the list from folks who are worried lest they may have missed something.

A current motion picture which sets forth a story of Indian life has in its cast a dusky femme called "Pretty Bear." She is, too.

Officially, spring will begin March 20. And the present three-cent rate of postage will expire June 30. Mother Nature may disregard the almanac, and congress may decide to continue the three-cent rate of postage. All dates contain a hard kernel of grit, but the fruit is good eating. And pleasing in the anticipation thereof.

The day on which you can think of nothing desirable which may come to pass on the morrow is a depressing stretch of time. Wherefore, dear brothers and sisters, bid thyself with the rosy possibilities of the morrow, and enjoy life.

Praise undeserved helps not much. It is pleasant in the taking, but the backfire is something terrible.

The latest George Arliss picture, "Man of Affairs," which opened at the State theatre Sunday, is somewhat of a novelty, due to the appearance of the British actor in the role of twins. "Man of Affairs" is a story of the British foreign office, having to do with the murder of a ruler in the far east, which murder was attributed to an Englishman and for which heavy indemnity was claimed. A play in no respect exceptional, galvanized into exceptional entertainment by the personality of an actor.

The late Donn Byrne, whose stories in the Saturday Evening Post a few years ago are remembered by some of us as having been of the kind which is difficult to get into and much more difficult to get away from—black magic practiced by a few writers, usually Irish, is recalled to mind this week by the showing on the screen at the Grand theatre of a technicolor picture titled "Wings of the Morning," "Wings of the Morning," which by the way, is not the title of a poem, but the name of a race-horse, is a noteworthy film in more ways than the average film thus far seen in a Salem show house. The color adapts itself well to the scenic features of the picture, being especially effective in the scenes made in the Killarney district of Ireland. The star of the production is a French actress who calls herself Annabella, and in this, her first appearance in an American picture, she meets fully the promises of her press agents. Henry Fonda plays the opposite role. John McCormack, the Irish tenor, sings three solos, and not one of them "Mother Machree," and there is a showing of the English derby (darby), in which Steve Donaghue, the greatest of British jockeys, rides the winner in person. But the greatest charm the picture has for me is the presence of the identical half mystic, gypsyish atmosphere which characterizes the Byrne stories. How it came not to be lost—well, it is too much for me, but there it is.

An odd book, Margaret Mitchell's "Gone With the Wind." It contains 1037 pages, and the reader who skips one finds himself in difficulty. And, what is more, he is unable to tell himself that he is not going to read any more of it without breaking his word. By the way, I suppose you know that Miss Mitchell's married name is Mrs. J. R. Marsh.

I observe that newcomers from the dustbowl sections are uttering no complaints about the rain, as has been the way with newcomers in certain former years. They make lip motions suggestive of a satisfied fish, but they say nothing.

It is the way we are, and we must make the best of ourselves. Tigg Wipp dropped in this morning to offer a few comments on radio announcers who pronounce words incorrectly, his immediate grievance being an announcer who pronounces "fattle" "few-tile." During the course of his comments Tigg glibly mispronounced three words, and I find on referring to the dictionary that I did some mispronouncing myself when I told him what I thought about it.

Nothing may properly be said against good English. Still and all, I don't dectonk the fate of a nation ever hung on the pronunciation of a word. Correct pronunciation is a little more than a shave and a clean collar to a word.
