

Tailored Suit Less Mannish

Wearability Is Universal For Spring or Summer;
Hip Length Leader

WHO can deny the perennial appeal of the man tailored suit? No one. Nor can even the most critical fashion critic deny the fact that there is much that is new in man tailored suits, particularly inasmuch as they seem less "man" tailored and more feminine at this time. You will be buying this type of suit for spring, and later on in lighter fabrics for summer, too, because its wearability is universal. Although the preferred jacket is hip length, there are varying degrees slightly above and below the hipline, which make all the difference as to whether a particular figure can wear this type of suit smartly.

From the Men
The men's wear fabrics still continue in popularity with herringbones and chalk stripes as tailored as can be wished for, but the Shetland type wools in their softly lovely colors, mixture tweeds in cereal and nubbed weaves, hairy mixtures, gabardines and sharkskins, as well as a number of other novelty fabrics too numerous to mention, offer a satisfying choice for every suit shopper.

To go back to "what makes the man-tailored suit feminine," it's all done in details such as lifted, broadened shoulders achieved through ingeniously placed tucks, darted padding and a generally softer character. Lapels are often wider, and notched much higher, giving a more individual effect. Cut-away effects are very flattering, too, whether squared off, tapered, or rounded, and vents lend interest to the sides and backs of many of the suits. Most dramatic of all details, however, are the pockets, many of which have been inspired by the original suit designs of the far-famed Creed, of London. With curved shapes, squares with the corners cut off, moon shapes, and any number of themes which, however, are always applied to the jacket perfectly flat and if trimmed at all, in only the most simple, tailored manner.

Double Duty
One of the most novel interpretations of this two piece tailored suit is that which offers two skirts; one in the same fabric as the jacket, and one in a contrasting fabric; another variation of the "compose" theme which offers such practicability and wardrobe variety in a few of the newer fashions.

Diversity Achieved
One of the most obvious developments in the men's style world is the fact that manufacturers are making each unit style in more of a diversity of fabric patterns.

Eleven Ranges to Be Given, Awards

Fun to Cook Electrically Is Contest Theme Set
by P.G.E. Company

Seven "streamlined" 1937 electric ranges, one each week for the next seven weeks, will be awarded to winners of the "More Fun to Cook Electrically" contest sponsored by the Portland General Electric company and the distributors of electric ranges in the territory served by Pepco. It was announced today by W. H. Hamilton, division manager.

A Norge electric range will be given to the winner of the first week's contest.

"Thousands of women are finding it is more fun to cook with electricity," Mr. Hamilton said. "Electric ranges are the cleanest and simplest cooking devices. But housewives are discovering it is sheer pleasure to use a modern range, which is fully automatic and eliminates failures. A modern range does almost everything except select the menu."

25-Word Slogans
Contestants in the electric range contest are to write 25 words on "Why It is More Fun to Cook with an Electric Range." Entries are to be deposited with any electric range dealer before Saturday, March 20. The winner of the first week's contest will be announced as soon as selected.

Further details of the contest will be given over radio station KOIN Tuesdays and Thursdays at 11:15 a.m., on Jane Marden's program.

Any resident of the territory served by Pepco, except dealers and distributors of electric ranges and their employes, is eligible for entry in the contest.

Completely decked out in spring prints, and the very latest in styles will be Miller's windows tonight when curtains are drawn back and the lights shine on the first showing of these new modes.

There will be new suits, with smart tailoring and intriguing new backs and fronts, there will be dresses of the smartest bright prints, never before equalled in fresh original designing and there will be accessories, so important in completing the ensemble.

Hip Length Jacket

In the new suit treatment, one of the newer details is the jacket that has no buttoned or hooked closing, but just wraps over with something of a surplus line, most often belted narrowly. Designers have come to the realization that the shorter, more carefully fitted jacket is the most becoming to the greater number of women, so that the hip-length jacket is one of the season's outstanding favorites.
