The hall is often used as a storage space for umbrellas, coats and hats, but by a little study is transformed into a pleasant room, in which to make your first good impression. Mirrors help a good deal to lighten up the front hall, even if the place is small. Tables of the nice new small tables that look so attractive in such a room.

The Scott marionettes performed before several hundred school children and grown-ups at Leslie auditorium both yesterday afternoon and evening.

"Aladdin" was the story played by these famous marionettes who performed their parts with excellent interpretation and fine feeling (as the critics say). The play lent itself particularly well to such a performance, because it was possible by clever manipulation, to produce such magic as a genie with red mouth and green eyes and a full course dinner which fades into remains of a carcass of fowl before the eyes of the audience.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Scott have appeared with their marionette show on several other occasions in Salem and have charmed their juvenile as well as adult audiences with such classics as "Goldilocks," and "King Midas."

Taking advantage of good service—in the well wearing navy and white fashion. Spruce is the word for her smart two-piece frock with its snowy pique collar and leaf green zipper. Nice curves on poplin and skirt; the latter conceals a pleat. Besides being a special attraction, those tucks make for proper fit in sleeves which are cut all in one with the dress.
