Style-Smiles --- by Gretchen

This kind of mixup is still considered a bad breach of etiquette, whereas custom has so changed that mixing a little rose dye with the traditional ivory is now excellent form for the bridal gown. Starkly plain is this version, its blush pink satin ornamented only with dull crepe applique on the puffed half of the sleeve. In blush pink foam, the marquisette veil floats down to a wee circular train. Copyright 1937, Esquire Features, Inc.

Wild Flowers Too Delicate for Gathering

EVERY sunny Sunday sees hundreds of autoists going to the country to enjoy an outing in the wooded hills, and the evening brings them back to the city, loaded with wild flowers and shrubs, many of which will never even be put in water. There's a fascination about wild flowers that invites city folk to gather them in armloads, without regard to next year's blooms.

Enough cannot be said in urging care in picking wild flowers. Any gardener knows, and most flower lovers should know, that destroying the leaves, stems and blooms of bulbous plants weakens them so they seldom recover enough to bloom another year. Picking flowers that depend on yearly re-seeding cuts future blooming.

Conservation societies throughout the country are active in their campaign to educate against destruction of wild plants, but the actual saving is to those whose very love for flowers caused the destruction.

If you must pick wild flowers, do so with care, be moderate, and when you have picked the flowers or shrubs, be sure to tend them carefully. Flowering shrubs tied on the fenders of cars or allowed to blow in the wind will be entirely spoiled before they arrive home, and the act of picking is the only pleasure derived.

Included among the familiar flowers and shrubs of the Pacific northwest that need protection are the following that have been listed in a booklet published by the Portland Garden club, in the interests of conservation of wild flowers: Calypso bulbosa, fritillarias, erythroniums, trilliums, wild lilies, iris, pitcher plant, maiden hair ferns, rhododendrons, azaleas, lady slipper, campanula pipperi, gentiana, Port Orford cedar, the Oregon myrtle, and the Pacific dogwood.

Today's Menu

Cream of tomato soup makes the hot dish for dinner today, kippered salmon is the fish. Cream of tomato soup Large combination vegetable salad Kippered salmon Rhubarb sauce with banana

For the dessert, add a sliced banana to the cooked rhubarb sauce. Serve the fish either cold, or poached until hot in milk.

Stuffed Tomatoes For Luncheon

Those tiny hot-house tomatoes that sometimes appear in the markets are just the thing to stuff for a very dainty luncheon salad. Mix hard cooked egg yolks with mayonnaise, mustard, salt, pepper and paprika just as you would for deviled eggs, but stuff the scooped-out tomatoes instead. Top with rice egg white and serve on lettuce or endive.

Walnut croquettes make a main dish, and if the main ingredient is home grown, the dish is inexpensive.

WALNUT CROQUETTES 1 cup chopped walnuts 1 beaten egg 3 cups dry breadcrumbs 1 cup milk 1 teaspoon salt Dash of pepper

Mix all but one cup of the crumbs, shape into flat cakes, roll in the remaining crumbs and fry in deep fat. These may be fried like hamburgers in a skillet.

A little onion and a dash of sage added make a mixture ready to form into small balls and brown to serve with tomato sauce.

Vegetables, walnuts and cheese mixed in a casserole and seasoned with salt, pepper and paprika may be moistened with milk of tomato juice to bake for a main dish.

Leftover vegetables or meats, with walnuts added, are even better served the second time. Pimientos chopped fine and mixed with chopped walnuts are spread over cream cheese sandwiches to make a delightful filling.

Cinnamon rolls with nuts added are just that much better than the plainer variety.

It's as simple as that, but very pretty, just mold grapefruit segments in lime or mint gelatine, and allow to harden in a ring mold or square pan. Arrange on lettuce leaves and surround by halved pineapple slices, centered with a dab of cottage cheese and topped with a strip of pimiento.

Backyard Trees Furnish Nuts For Cooking

Surely women of the Willamette valley have a gold mine in the walnut trees of their back yards. So many things can be done to dress up meals, with the crop from even one tree.
