"Rich Girl-Poor Girl"

by Faith Baldwin

CHAPTER XVII

Mr. Martin had made it impossible for her to refuse. He hadn't said so in so many words, but she knew. She went home, walking through a blinding drift of blowing snow, her lungs gasping in the registered temperature of twenty below zero, her cheeks whipped red and her eyes full of tears. The house was a haven of warmth and comfort when she reached it. She took off her heavy outer things, pulled the little knitted toque from her hair, kicked off her overshoes. She thought, But after all, the extra money . . .

She telephoned Larry's father and the arrangements were made. Two nights a week over an indefinite period; an hour's work and five dollars in her pocket for each hour. She would begin next week.

Jonathan dropped in about nine o'clock, after office hours. She said, shaking a corn-popper over the glowing coals in the grate, "I've been knighted by royalty. I'm now a knighted knight."

Jonathan looked at her for a moment, then he said, "You're on time. I'm glad. I've been waiting for you."

"Yes, I've told you about him," she said. "He's a full grown man."

"Jonathan said, after a while. . ."

"Seems to me I've heard something. . ."

"That little girl of the Downings, he remembers about a pretty blond child about sixteen. . . I was called to see her last week and her mother told me privately that there wasn't anything the matter with her except a tantrum. She hadn't been permitted to go somewhere with young Dexter. . . Sorry," he said abruptly, "I had no business telling you that. I forgot. Thinking aloud, I guess. That's the effect you have on me."

"One large, listening ear?" she asked him, smiling. "Well, I've already forgotten. Betty Downing's a bright youngster. She's in the Junior class, you know, and my star pupil. I hadn't realized. . . She broke off. Now she remembered too. She said, 'Larry and Betty whispering together in the corner. And Betty was one of the girls who had bought a brighter lipstick when Larry came upon the scene. She shook her head angrily. "It's not talk about them," she said. "I have school all day long and after Monday, I'll have it twice a week at night as well. What about yourself?"

"I'm fine," he said. He told her about Mrs. Angell's baby. He said, "And I've been called in consultation with Dr. Jameson tomorrow."

"Tomorrow?" She looked at him. "That is a feather in your cap, Jon," she said happily.

He did not answer but later, walking gingerly homeward, reflected that he hoped it would not be a goose feather. Jameson was a very healthy aversive to consultants. But Mrs. Trevor had insisted. Jonathan had taken care of her during a slight illness and now when this question of an operation on her baby had arisen, she had asked for his advice. . . "Two heads are better than one," she'd said.

He yawned his way into the house, hoping that he would not be called that night. Up all last night and the night before with Mrs. Angell had rather impaired his faculties, he decided. He hoped that he would get through it creditably.

He stopped to look at the telephone pad. Evelina had written very darkly, and as if angrily, that Miss Sutton had telephoned. She, Evelina, had told her that he could be reached at Rose Ward's and Miss Sutton had hung up "in her ear."

Jonathan laughed, and tore up the sheet with his message. He had seen a good deal of Sally Sutton the past few weeks one way or another. Sometimes she came in and interrupted his office hours and several times she had appeared and carried him off to dinner. But some day she would be made to understand that he wasn't like Phil Dexter who could shed his business responsibilities at the stroke of five.

That made him remember Rose. He paused on the stairs, frowning. He hadn't liked what Mrs. Downing had said about Larry Dexter. If that young cub bothered Rose in any way. . .

He went on upstairs, thinking hard thoughts about eighteen year old boys who had too much money and too much assurance, and he guessed, emotional precocity. But Rose, he comforted himself, was a sensible girl. She could handle a dozen Larry Dexters.

His thoughts swung to the consultation which would take place on the day following. He thought, it's gratifying, of course, but if I make an open enemy of her. . .

The consultation took place with the formality attendant upon such occasions. On his way to the hospital where Mrs. Trevor's sister, Miss Marcy, was staying under observation, Jonathan was conscious of decided nervousness. If—if he were forced to disagree with Doctor Jameson, a man nearly forty years his senior with experience and reputation! He could not visualize a more painful situation. But he had not come to Riverport to be a medical Yes-Man. If he disagreed, he disagreed, and that was that. He wished suddenly that Rose were beside him; that she could take it over from the wheel and put it over her and feel her fingers close about his own in a warm, reassuring grip.

Mrs. Trevor was waiting for him downstairs, in a condition bordering upon panic. He had learned how close this younger sister was to her, the only living relative she possessed. And Alice Trevor had a deadly fear of the knife. Her husband had died on the table while undergoing an emergency operation during a house trip to the far West. She rose to greet him now, her face haggard and drawn. She said, almost inaudibly:

"Doctor Jameson hasn't come yet. . . Oh, Doctor Kimber— we just can't take any chances. If there's a shadow of doubt. . . She twisted her thin hands together. . . "I haven't anyone but Ella," she said pitifully.

He murmured the usual palliative responses but she did not appear to listen. She said:

"I've known Doctor Jameson all my life. I'm one of the few patients he retained in general practice after he began to specialize in surgery. I don't trust him. . ."

Jonathan came in, very erect, his blue eyes bluer than ever, the white hair brushed to a silver cap. His fine smooth-shaven face was courteous and unfriendly. He asked, changing the greetings had been exchanged, "Shall we see our patient?"

They left Mrs. Trevor and went marked the young West Virginian as a coming champion. Snead's putter lost some of its characteristic magic on the final round. He carded five birdies but three-putted the first, fifth and 17th, thereby losing three shots that meant the difference between victory and the runner-up's money.

The top ten finishers in the U. S. open golf championship today, with their scores for each of the four rounds, 72-hole totals and prize money:

Ralph Guldahl, 71-69-72-69—281, $10,000.

Indiana's Medley Team Sets Record

COLUMBUS, O., June 12.—(AP)—Indiana's medley team set a new distance relay team record of 10 minutes and four-tenths of a second.

The previous record, 10 minutes four and seven-tenths seconds, was set in the 1935 Fresno relay by a team from the Olympic club, Los Angeles.

Poster Expected Home

SILVERTON, June 12.—John Porter, who underwent a serious operation, is expected home Sunday or Monday. Mr. Porter has been improving rapidly during the past two weeks.

Picnic Postponed

AMITY, June 12.—The joint picnic of the Men's Commercial and the Women's Civic Improvement clubs, planned to be held here in the city park Thursday evening has been postponed until Thursday evening, June 17.

Choir to Appear

SILVERTON, June 12.—The Augsburg college choir of Minneapolis will give a concert at the Eugene Field auditorium in Silvertown on June 20. The choir began a month's tour on the Pacific coast on June 4.

Parade Due to Start at 7:45

All six Teams Will Turn out, Four to Play but Selections Delayed

Y. M. C. A. at 7:45 o'clock and will arrive at the field at 8:15 after winding through downtown streets. The first game is scheduled to start at 8:30 o'clock.

The major league team selling the most tickets to the opener will be assured of a place in the opening game while the other five must stand their chances in a drawing to be made at the field.

Junior's Featured

There will be two major league games Monday night. The minor league teams made up of players under 20 years old will play one game on Thursday and Friday nights, the other contest those nights being a major league game.

Teams will march in the parade in the order in which they finished in last year's summer league. The order will be: Square Deal Radio, Hogg Bros., Paper Mill, Wait's, Man's Shop, Eagles, Bosler's, Pade's, St. Joseph's and Valley Motor. The last four named are junior league teams.

Coach "Spec" Keene of Williamette university will assist Bill Phillips, Salem softball association president, in making the drawings while the teams are all lined up at attention.

Mel Porter Wins A. A. U. Marathon

WASHINGTON, June 12.—(AP)—Mel Porter, veteran runner for the Millrose athletic club of New York, bounded to victory in the National A. A. U. marathon today.

He covered the 26 mile, 385 yard course from historic Mount Vernon to the White House in 2 hours 44 minutes and 42 seconds—almost a half-mile ahead of the rest of the runners.

Finishing behind Porter in order were Pat Dengis, Baltimore; James Bartlett, Oshawa, Ont., and Clarence De Mar, Keene, N. H.

CURT COMMENTS

Twenty or more ambitious divers will battle over the 36-hole route out at the Salem Golf course today in quest of eight places in the team which will go to Eugene a week hence to engage in the Willamette Valley Golf association tournament in defense of the championship won here a year ago.

Bob Day, Sephus Starr and Bob Utter were some of the latest to sign up for the 36-hole medal test, and others who report this morning will be admitted.

In view of the interest shown in this contest, evidenced in the entry list for the tryout and in the strenuous "play 'em as they lie" practicing the aspirants were doing Saturday the Salem club's chances to repeat at Eugene are pretty fair but with Laurelwood's strong team playing on a familiar course, that club is the favorite for a victory next Sunday. If Laurelwood does win on top of its two previous championships, it will gain permanent possession of the trophy.

The following Sunday, June 27, the Oregon Club team comes here for a return match in which the Salem Golf club outfit will be out after revenge.

Driver Licenses Sought by Many

An average of 500 applications for motor vehicle operators' licenses, effective July 1 for a two year period, are being received here daily, Secretary of State Snell announced.

More than 40,000 of these applications have been received. Issuance of licenses will begin June 15.

A large number of extra employees have been assigned to checking the applications.

Warneke Holds Bees

BOSTON, June 12.—(AP)—Lou Warneke, the Cardinals' right-hander who has been blasted twice this season by the Bees, gained some slight satisfaction today by holding the Boston to five hits as his mates pounded out a 4-1 victory.

St. Louis 4 10 0

Boston 1 5 1

Warneke and Ogradowski; MacFayden, Lanning and Lopez.

PHILADELPHIA, June 12.—(AP)—The Chicago Cubs knocked Wayne Lamaster out of the box in three innings and then went to defeat the Phillies, 10 to 8, behind Larry French's southpaw pitching today.

Chicago 10 15 1

Philadelphia 5 10 1

French and Bottarini; LaMaster, Jorgens, Johnson and Grace.

Papermakers Trim Mt. Angel's Team

The Salem Papermakers first string team pocketed a 9 to 0 victory in an encounter with the Mt. Angel softball players on the latter's lighted home field last night. Henry Singer pitched and Glen Kelly caught for the visitors while Kaser took the mound and Nys received for the Mt. Angel nine. Score:

Papermakers 9 7 0

Mt. Angel 0 3 2
